The Works of ALEXANDER PUSHKIN

NOTE

The verse translations with few exceptions, keep to Pushkin's metre and rhyme scheme. In particular it should be noted that the version of Eugene Onegin is strictly faithful to the form of the original. The date placed at the end of each piece refers to the year when it was composed. In some instances it has seemed desirable to indicate as well the year when it was first published. Aside from Eugene Onegin the contents of each section are arranged chronologically.

INTRODUCTION

I

A QUARTER of a century after Pushkin's death a Russian critic wrote "Pushkin is our all." The nihilists were a dissenting voice but with this exception the acclaim of the poet as the supreme embodiment of the national genius has been universal. In time it became usual for his compatriots to regard him as the peer of the foremost artists of the West ranking with Shakespeare, Michelangelo, Beethoven. If the rest of the world has not been persuaded to accept this estimate it allows that Pushkin is a literary figure not to be ignored. And yet abroad he is the least appreciated, as he is the least known of the major Russian authors. The reason for this is not far to seek. His chief medium was verse and furthermore verse that singularly resists translation since it is lacking in imagery and is innocent of intellection, relying for its magic on precision, clarity, and a verbal felicity as palpable as it is difficult to convey. There is something in Pushkin's poetry irrespective of its substance as Tschaikovsky observed which enables it to penetrate to the depths of the soul—that something is its music.

The transvaluation of values that came about with the revolution in altering the approach to Pushkin served only to enhance his reputation and his popularity. The coming centenary of his death has brought out the fact that both Soviet Russia and the Dispersion are eager to claim him for their own. To the emigres he is a kind of palladium, the symbol of the nation's cultural tradition now temporarily in eclipse and the pledge of its renewal. To those at home in the new regime he is equally a national figure, in fact has officially been proclaimed such but with a difference.

In 1899 on the occasion of the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of Pushkin's birth, an underground revolutionary organization issued a leaflet in which it repudiated him on the grounds that he was never a friend of the people but a friend of the Czar, the gentry the bourgeoisie. Such an attitude is now regarded as dangerously purblind. The new society, seeing itself as the heir of all the ages accepts him as a precious part of its patrimony. In connection with the centenary active efforts are being made to bring the poet to the attention of the masses. Millions of copies of his works are being printed both in the original and in the various languages of the Union. Critics are busy commenting on them graphic artists are illustrating them composers are setting them to music producers are staging his plays and his tales in dramatic form and for some time a Pushkin hour has been an obligatory feature of radio programs. His writings are looked upon as the proper pabulum for youth and as the model for young authors. Under the hammer and sickle, as under the double headed eagle exegesis and research center upon the poet's life and works so that the already monumental body of Pushkin scholarship grows apace.

The new Russia as did the old reveres in him the greatest poet of the nation the man who shaped the literary language and fathered its literature. But it justifies delight in him in new ways. He is found to be as congenial with the present social order as he was formerly felt to be with the old. Pushkin has always been the object of a cult, and by the same token a figure around whom legends clung. Today in its cruder form the legend runs that he was a rebel poet whose valiant Muse never ceased to do battle against tyranny.

and who perished at the hands of an assassin the tool of a reactionary clique. More responsible interpreters represent him as one who though not a man of the masses felt with them by reason of his deep humanity and had their emancipation at heart as a writer whose work possessed a buoyant life-affirming quality expressive of the attitude of a rising social class as an author who progressed from a personal lyricism to an objective realistic art as a good European a citizen of the world a Renaissance man with universal interests as a free spirit unhampered by skepticism and mysticism rejoicing in the clear light of reason and combating however indirectly the powers of darkness.

The foreign reader in making his response to Pushkin has one advantage over the poet's compatriots the innocence of the eye. True what meets this eye is only a pale reflection of the original. Nevertheless the verse and prose chosen for this volume will it is hoped enable the outsider to discover for himself something of the enchantment that Pushkin has exercised over his countrymen. The essay that follows is not so much a critical appraisal as a bare outline of Pushkin's story. The work may have more meaning when one knows a little of the man behind it.

II

ALEXANDER SERGEYEVICH PUSHKIN was born on June 6 (May 26 O.S.) 1799 in Moscow. On his father's side he came of an old well-connected family which had long been living beyond its means. Through his mother he was descended from the Negro of Peter the Great, Ibrahim Hannibal who seems to have been the son of an Ethiopian princeling. Hannibal married a Balto-German gentlewoman by whom he had eleven children one of them being Pushkin's maternal grandfather. The poet was rather proud of his six-century-old lineage and he also liked to refer to his African origin, on one occasion speaking with sympathy of the fate of those he called my brother Negroes. Whether or not this exotic strain in his heredity had anything to do with his sensual temperament and his keen feeling for rhythm must remain a matter of conjecture.

Like most of the gentry the Pushkins were more Gallic than Russian in their culture. French was spoken in the home; the children's tutors were apt to be French and so were the books on the library shelves. Their contents were the intellectual fare of little Alexander, an impulsive rather precocious child with a phenomenal memory. The home atmosphere was not unfavorable to the boy's literary interests. Among the people who came to the house were prominent men of letters. The father dabbled in French verse and one of the uncles had something of a reputation as an author. Even the servants wooed the Muse. His knowledge of the vernacular and his intimacy with native folklore Pushkin owed chiefly to them since they had charge of him most of the time. The parents were fashionable pleasure-loving people, and the mother, the beautiful Creole, was rather flighty. Neither took much interest in the four children they had brought into the world, least of all in Alexander. He seems to have formed no emotional ties either with his father or his mother. At heart he remained all his life a free spirit, hampered by his weaknesses rather than encumbered by pieties filial or other.

At the age of twelve the boy entered the Lyceum at Tsarskoe Selo (now Detskoe Selo), the Russian Versailles. This exclusive boarding school intended to form future bureaucrats was housed in a wing of the Great Palace and enjoyed the Emperor's special protection.

On the teaching staff were some men of note and the French instructor curiously enough was a brother of Marat. The curriculum included besides the humanities some courses in political economy and natural law but the goal of this education was the gentleman rather than the scholar. Pushkin spent six unbroken years in this genial establishment where he formed enduring friendships. In fact his schoolmates stood him in lieu of family and home. An indifferent student he profited chiefly by his reading of Voltaire and of the gayer and more elegant poets of the French Enlightenment. He also dipped into the Latin classics though as he confessed later he preferred Apuleius to Cicero.

Literature was in vogue at the Lyceum. Pushkin could hardly recall the time when he was not writing verse first in French then in the vernacular. His earliest work in Russian was a long poem modeled on La Pucelle d'Orleans. Naturally he contributed to the manuscript magazines edited by the pupils. He turned out a solemn ode now and then but for the most part he scribbled anaacreontic lyrics, epistles and wistful elegies, madrigals and pastorals, all derivative stuff, but couched in an unusually fluent and graceful style. The epigrams which he tossed off early won him the reputation of a wicked wit. He had just turned fifteen when he leaped into print with a poem. While still at school he began to be considered the hope of Russian literature by a group of advanced young writers who met occasionally to poke fun at their stodgy elders. Never did recognition come more easily to an author.

The erotic strain in Pushkin's early verse was more than a literary manner. He was as premature in love as in letters. His amatory career began while he was still wearing the schoolboy's blue uniform with the red collar. He is said to have shared the manly pleasures of the hussars stationed in the town. His contacts with these officers may have encouraged both the libertine and the liberal in him for the army was then the seat of opposition as the universities were to be in a later generation Moreover the Lyceum was near enough to the palace for familiarity to breed contempt The school publications sometimes contained shafts directed against the august person of the Emperor himself

Upon graduation from the Lyceum in June 1817 Pushkin received a nominal appointment in the Foreign Office The hot-blooded youth promptly began to sow his wild oats with zest He drank gambled fought duels attended the ballet—and the ballerinas—and above all was a martyr to sensual love, with dire consequences to his health and rather slender purse If we are to credit a poem of this period this hideous descendant of Negroes pleased youthful beauty by the shameless fury of desire All these distractions did not hinder him from composing verse He was beginning to write from experience, and his style was taking shape In those days, however he was best known for his saucy epigrams aimed at high dignitaries of Church and State including the Czar and as the author of a few civic poems deploring the evils of serfdom extolling liberty and fulminating against tyranny A certain section of the cultivated public was then agitated by the political unrest which led to the formation of secret societies and was to culminate in the conspiracy of December 1825 so that sallies against the existing regime were apt to be warmly received It is noteworthy that his radicalism went hand in hand with an advocacy of the rule of law as against an arbitrary autocracy

He was also working on and off at Ruslan and Ludmila a long narrative poem It was completed in March, 1820 and published three months later In it was this playful tale of a princess snatched away from the bridal chamber by a magician and eventually rescued by a knight was a puerile performance but its appearance was something of an event. The republic of Russian letters then a diminutive country indeed had for some time been split into two hostile camps. The conservatives, led by a pedant who was a vice admiral and who was to become Minister of Education, sought to rid the literary language of foreign elements and preserve its traditional connection with the archaic tongue of the Church books. They championed the dignified and decorous classicism of the preceding century. A school of younger and more gifted writers adopted the new style. They sought to modernize and secularize the language bringing it nearer to the speech of polite society. They cultivated a less solemn variety of classicism and were receptive to romantic influences. Pushkin's poem, severely attacked by the die hards was a shining example of the new poetics and contributed to the triumph of the progressives. The common reader was charmed by its light tone and felicitous lines. For years Pushkin was known as the singer of Ruslan and Ludmila. Glinka's opera was to enhance the popularity of the tale.

WHEN the little book in its colored paper cover made its appearance, its author was no longer in the capital. The previous month he had been transferred to the South to serve under General Inzov the administrator of the colonies set up in the sparsely populated provinces of New Russia. This was deportation in disguise. Early in 1820 Pushkin had been driven to the thought of suicide by the rumor that he had been subjected to the intolerable indignity of a flogging by the police. Apparently imagining that overt punishment would rehabilitate him he behaved in a provoking manner.

He was leaving Petersburg in a mood of mingled rage and relief. He had wearied of dissipation, and exile came as a release. He carried with him a letter in which the Foreign Minister recommended him to his new superior in these terms: Deprived of filial attachment he could have only one sentiment—a passionate desire for independence. There is no excess in which this young man has not indulged, as there is no perfection which he cannot attain by the high excellence of his talents. The letter further stated that the culprit solemnly promised to renounce [his errors] forever, and that his future now depended on the success of the General's good counsels.

General Inzov did not burden the enfant terrible either with counsels or official duties. Instead, he lodged and boarded him, gave him frequent leaves, lent him money, and when he was forced to put him under domestic arrest for his escapades, visited the prisoner and entertained him with talk of the Spanish revolution. Pushkin stayed for a while at Yekaterinopolav (now Dnepropetrovsk) and for two years at Kishinev. There is a story that he joined a camp of gypsies and wandered with them over the steppes of Southern Bessarabia. It is certain that he traveled with some aristocratic friends in the Northern Caucasus and in the Crimea, spending several sunny weeks on their estate, which was situated on the enchanted southern coast of the peninsula. He spent equally happy weeks on another friend's estate near Kiev, where he came in touch with several men who were to play a leading part in the Decembrist conspiracy. Here his time was divided between demagogical discussions, as he put it, and champagne dinners. There were few but charming women, including the beautiful and complaisant hostess. He continued to fall in love with all the pretty women in sight although at least one of his flames believed at this time that his sole devotion was to the Muse

At first he rather enjoyed his new situation. A man with his literary upbringing could not but delight in the classical associations which clung to the outer fringe of the Mediterranean world where fate had cast him. He liked to think of himself as a second Ovid lost among barbarians. But before long exile began to pall. There was the boredom and the penury, the absence of civilized amusements like the theatre, the lack of intellectual companionship and of creature comforts. Such lines as I've lived to bury my desires would point to moods of utter dejection. As his stay in the accursed town of Kishinev lengthened he chafed more and more under the burden of his banishment. He soon slipped back into his old dissipated habits. In other ways too he proved unregenerate. His poem, The Dagger, written in 1821 to celebrate the slaying of Caesar and of Kotzebue is on a par with the boldest political lyrics of his earlier days. To an extent his puerile bravado, his impudent escapades, his sartorial extravagances, his cynicism were now a protest against the constituted authorities of whom he felt himself to be the victim.

He drew a breath of relief when in the summer of 1823 he was ordered to join the staff of Count Vorontzov, Governor General of New Russia at Odessa. The busy, picturesque seaport contrasted favorably with the dusty landlocked Bessarabian city. For a while he enjoyed the sun and the sea and among other amenities the Italian opera, the theatre and the oysters at Otton's. But he was soon complaining about his stifling Asiatic jail and forming plans of escape.

A new trouble was now added to the old ones: he did not get on with his superior. The Governor Gen eral had little regard for the genius of his humble subordinate. He began by offering him patronage which the touchy poet found insulting. Then the Count attempted to force him to perform his official duties. Pushkin was outraged, he was not a Government clerk, but a professional author. True, he received an annual salary of 700 rubles, but he considered this a convict's keep rather than a civil servant's emolument. He tendered his resignation.

Count Vorontzov had for some time been making efforts to rid himself of the troublesome fellow. He may have been partly moved by jealousy for Pushkin had fallen in love with the Countess among others. And then the authorities got hold of a letter of his in which he said he was taking lessons in pure atheism from a deaf Englishman and that the doctrine though disagreeable was most plausible. Real punishment was in order. He was expelled from the service and ordered to betake himself to the family estate at Mikhailovskoye in the province of Pskov and to live there definitely under the surveillance of the police and the ecclesiastical authorities. The disguised banishment was now an open one. He shook the dust of Odessa from his feet in August 1824.

The four years spent in the South enriched his experience and stimulated his growth as a writer. Working, as he did by fits and starts, he managed to produce a considerable amount of verse. Literature was beginning to count as a source of income for a man constantly in need of money. Some of his lyrics reveal the influence of Andre Chenier. His verse shows more clearly the effect of his reading of Byron with whose work he became acquainted during this period. There was much in Pushkin's situation to feed a romantic malaise and a romantic revolt against the conventions of society.

Byron's imprint is clearly recognizable in the verse narratives that he was then writing. The Caucasian Prisoner—the earliest of the so-called Southern Poems—is the story of a Circassian girl who falls in love with a Russian prisoner and drowns herself after helping him to escape. Another has to do with the love of a Tartar khan for a Polish princess, his prisoner, and her death in the harem at the hand of a rival. The Gypsies relates the story of a young man who fleeing civilization, joins a gypsy camp, kills his rival for the favors of Zemphira, and herself as well, and is expelled from the tribe. The Brother Robbers, like so many works of the period, remained unfinished and is indeed a mere fragment of what was to be a long tale about outlaws. These poems contain remote echoes of Rousseauism (Pushkin was a reader of Jean Jacques) and exhibit that sensitiveness to nature in its more exotic aspects, that mood of aristocratic misanthropy and world-weary tristesse that are associated with Byronism.

Among the longer pieces completed in the South was The Gavriliad, which is believed to have been written in 1821 during Passion Week. It is a bawdy burlesque of the Annunciation which manages to be blasphemous and ribald in a bland, graceful eighteenth-century manner. Ever since the Lyceum days Pushkin had occasionally lapsed into risqué verse.

His romanticism did not go very deep. He was not a rebel by nature but by force of circumstance. He managed to patch up a peace with life, and as he sobered down, his writings came to take on a realistic character. Some of the ideas and predilections that he retained through life indicate, however, that for all his kinship with the eighteenth century, he belonged to a romantic generation. To contemporaries at least he was the Byron of Russia. He was described as such by an Englishman writing from St Petersburg on Christmas Eve 1829

IV

ARRIVING in Mikhailovskoye in August, 1824 the poet found himself in the bosom of his family. The homecoming was scarcely like the return of the prodigal. The elder Pushkin undertook to assist the local marshal of the nobility in exercising official surveillance over the young man which involved, among other forms of espionage opening his correspondence. As a result there were violent scenes after one of which the father made the charge that Alexander had raised his hand against him. Pushkin was in despair: a fortress jail, a monastic prison would be better than this domestic hell. Fortunately the father put an end to the intolerable situation by removing himself and the rest of the family to another estate, thus leaving the field clear to his unnatural son.

The latter remained alone in the shabby little manor house surrounded by Grandfather Hannibal's old-fashioned furniture. For company he depended partly on the servants and especially on his old nurse who would entertain him with folk tales during the long winter evenings. He lived in the house like a guest taking no interest in the affairs of the estate. He walked and rode horseback a good deal visited the country fairs and liked to mingle with the beggars who chanted the Russian equivalent of spirituals at the gates of the local monastery. He avoided the gentry, except for one neighboring estate where there was a houseful of women. He played whist with the lady of the house, teased one of her daughters and flirted with another. Eventually both the mother and the elder daughter fell in love with him and quarreled over him. He was himself infatuated with a niece a married wo man. In a famous lyric elicited by the affair he described her as the genius of pure beauty, but several years later in a private communication in which he casually announced his conquest of the lady, he spoke of her as a Babylonian harlot. He also had an affair with a serf girl, which resulted in her pregnancy. Whether the child was actually born and if so what became of it is one of the few things concerning the poet which the legion of Pushkinists have so far been unable to ferret out.

For the first time he had a chance to work steadily free from the usual distractions. Always keenly aware of the gaps in his education he read a great deal particularly in Russian history and he wrote. He began by completing The Gypsies. He had brought from Odessa another unfinished manuscript the first two chapters of a novel in verse Eugene Onegin which he had begun at Kishinev. Since he was, as usual in great need of money he issued them in two separate volumes and went on with the tale at his leisure. To the list of his long narrative poems he added Count Nulin a skit in which he amused himself by parodying The Rape of Lucretia.

The lyrics of this period illustrate the breadth of the poet's sympathies. He took pleasure in adapting foreign material and he liked to set his stage with properties from other times and countries. On one occasion he spoke of himself as the Minister of Foreign Affairs on the Russian Parnassus. He turned into Russian several stanzas from Orlando Furioso, paraphrased some verses of The Song of Songs, and composed a group of poems on themes borrowed from the Koran. It is possible that at the end of his stay at Mil'kailovskoye he wrote The Prophet suggested by a passage in Isaiah. This lyric bodies forth the romantic notion of the poet as the divinely inspired latter. Generations of

Russian readers have felt it to be one of the most superb examples of noble utterance in the language

During his rustic captivity Pushkin made a new departure in composing what he described as a romantic tragedy Boris Godunov. It was completed in the late autumn of 1825. He is said to have written a comedy in French at the age of twelve and he never ceased to take the liveliest interest in the theatre. There is a dramatic element in his narrative poems particularly in The Gypsies. That he should next attempt a play in verse was a logical step. Boris Godunov is a dramatic chronicle dealing with the initial phase of Russia's Troubled Times at the close of the sixteenth century. It is not however a work of political import. The upheavals of the period merely supply the material for a drama of personal ambition. The principle of autocracy is not called in question—both the elective Czar and the Pretender speak and act in its name. The treatment of the collective character "the People" is typical of an age when even extremists looked askance at the idea of a popular rising. The dramatist attributes to the populace a deep seated moral instinct but he sees it also as easily misguided unconscious of its might a blind unpredictable somewhat dangerous giant.

In writing his play Pushkin hoped to give the native stage a new orientation. The theatre in Russia had been dominated since its inception by French classicism. He believed that the popular laws of Elizabethan drama suited the Russian temperament better than the courtly habit of Racine's tragedy. Accordingly he deliberately patterned his work on the system of our father Shakespeare. He read the plays, be it noted in a French translation. In Boris Godunov the Aristotelian unities are disregarded the action does not revolve around a single hero tragedy and comedy are commingled and occasionally colloquial prose intrudes upon the stately blank verse. Blank verse itself was frowned upon as not sufficiently dignified and was indeed soon to be literally outlawed by the directors of the Imperial theatres.

Pushkin did not influence Russian dramaturgy as he had hoped. In fact he did not even make a real contribution to the native repertory. He produced not a Shakespearean piece, but a series of loosely connected scenes dramatically ineffective and difficult to stage. Although the censor reported favorably on Boris Godunov finding that the spirit of the whole was "monarchistic," the text was withheld from publication until 1831, and the first attempt to produce the play which was made nearly forty years later proved a failure. It remained a closet piece, and as such is held in high esteem because of its magnificent poetry. Its stage reputation it owes to the fact that it furnished the libretto for Musorgsky's opera as edited by Rimsky-Korsakov.

The writing of the play gave Pushkin a sense of accomplishment. Further his life at Mikhailovskoye offered other satisfactions. It held the simple pleasures that he described in the fourth chapter of Eugene Onegin. And yet this charming spot was after all but a prison and his days were fettered days. This banishment was more irksome than the earlier one. Again the thought of expatriation haunted him: he would settle in Western Europe; he would flee to Greece to America. Before the end of the first lonely year he was petitioning the emperor to allow him to go abroad for his health. Instead he was permitted to visit the neighboring town of Pskov.

On November 19 (O.S.) 1825 Alexander I died. For a while there was uncertainty as to which of his two brothers was his legitimate successor. The secret societies, of which there were two decided to take advantage of the confusion and carry out a military coup d'état to the end of establishing a constitutional monarchy or possibly a republican government. It is said that when the news of the Emperor's death and the rumor of the rising reached Pushkin he decided, on the spur of the moment to rush to Petersburg. He had not been a member of either of the societies. It may be that his friends who did belong considered him too flighty to be counted on or that they wished to spare him the danger or perhaps his own prudence prevailed. Besides his enthusiasm for liberty had cooled. It is probable however that had he been in the capital he would have joined the insurgents on the impulse of the moment. The fact is that the exile did not break bonds. On the eve of the rising he was completing his neat and frivolous Count Nulin and he spent the fateful December fourteenth as though it were any other day. He was safe at Mikhailovskoye during the subsequent months when the Decembrists were being rounded up and tried and he was still there when on July 13 (O.S.) five of the rebels with one of whom he was fairly intimate, were hanged.

The failure of the conspiracy could not but sober him further. He was now inclined to regard the existing order as a necessity. He sincerely wished to make his peace with the government. An influential friend advised him to be patient, lie low and write well intentioned pieces like Bozsis Godunov for although the authorities knew he was not implicated manuscript copies of his poems had been found in the possession of most of the conspirators. He obeyed, turning inwardly at his protracted isolation and tried to concentrate on Eugene Onegin. In May he petitioned the new Czar for permission to reside in Moscow or Petersburg or to go abroad assuring his monarch that he had no intention of opposing the accepted order. Some days later he was writing to a friend that if freedom were restored to him he would not remain in Russia another month, adding: "We live in a sad age but when I picture to myself London railways, steam boats, English reviews, or Paris theatres and brothels, my god forsaken Mikhailovskoye bores and enrages me."

Summer came and went and still there was no change in his situation. Finally, early in September, a special government courier arrived in Pskov to escort him to Moscow in great haste. Was he to be elapped into jail or like so many of his friends, deported to Siberia? He did not know that the government had just received a favorable report on him from a special agent who had investigated him. On reaching the capital Pushkin was immediately taken to see the Emperor. Exactly what passed between the poet and the autocrat is not known. The outcome was that Pushkin's banishment was brought to an abrupt end.

Whether or not it is true that on being questioned by the Czar Pushkin said frankly that had he been in Petersburg he would have appeared on the Senate Square with the rebels, it is certain that he promised to be a loyal subject thereafter. There is little doubt that at the time he sincerely admired Nicholas as a man and believed in his greatness as a ruler and a patriot. Shortly after his release from Mikhailovskoye Pushkin penned a memoir on popular education at the Czar's request. Here he expressed the hope that those who shared the ideas of the conspirators had come to their senses and that the brothers and friends of those who had perished would perceive the necessity of the punishment and forgive it in their hearts. On the margin of the original manuscript Pushkin twice drew a gallows with five men hanging from it. He may have writing to his imperial master. Just the same he [Pushkin] is pretty much of a good for nothing but if we succeed in directing his pen and his talk, it will be useful.

In April 1828 when war with Turkey broke out, he asked permission to join the army but was refused. Grand Duke Constantine Pavlovich wrote to Benckendorff that the poet was guided not by patriotism but by the desire to infect the young officers with his immoral principles. He applied for leave to go abroad and was again refused. That he was in spite of everything still a suspect character was brought home to him with particular vividness when the police discovered in the possession of a certain army officer a manuscript poem of his with an inscription seeming to show that it referred to the Decembrist revolt. Although Pushkin explained that the lines had been written before the conspiracy the State Council eventually made him sign a paper declaring that he would submit all his writings to preliminary censorship and subjected him to secret police surveillance. As a matter of fact he had never ceased to be under such surveillance. At the time when this sentence was passed (summer of 1828) he had another lawsuit on his hands. Three serfs had complained to the Metropolitan that their master was undermining their religious faith by reading them The Gavriiad. Pushkin did not scruple to deny his authorship of the poem but to no avail. The charge which was a serious matter was dropped only at the personal intervention of the Emperor, to whom the poet had addressed a confidential letter presumably confessing his authorship and offering his apologies for having perpetrated the piece.

In what Pushkin wrote during these years there was little to give the authorities cause for suspicion. Indeed, in his forceful if ill-constructed long poem Poltava (1828) he celebrates imperial Russia as Virgil did imperial Rome. The traitor Mazeppa plotting the Ukraine's secession from Muscovy is a villain out of melodrama while Peter the victor of Poltava and symbol of the rising empire, is pictured as a demi god. One or two of his lyrics go so far as to express the poet's devotion to his sovereign, and on the occasion of the Polish rebellion of 1830-31, he spoke in the unmistakable accents of a nationalist and a patriot. For the rest the social motif is muted in his verse. It is upon the emotional commonplaces in which the personal lyric is rooted that his shorter poems dwell. There are among them manifestoes of an aristocratic aestheticism. With Horatian disdain of the mob and its utilitarian preoccupations he declares that the poet is born not to traffic in the marketplace or engage in life's battles but *for inspiration

For sweet sounds and for prayers*

This aestheticism carries an emphasis on the poet's independence which in itself was an implicit protest against the tyrannical paternalism that was strangling Russia. If only now and then his dissidence and his democratic leanings do crop out in his lyrics notably in Secular Power. Whatever its purpose his verse was like a breath of pure air in the stagnant atmosphere of oppression.

While he was not precisely a new Pushkin the years were exercising a restraining effect on both his work and his conduct. At the close of the sixth chapter of Eugene Onegin written toward the end of his stay at Mikhailovskoye he had already said good bye to his youth. He felt that he was past his noon. It was time for him to settle down. He ran after women as before but now with the notion of matrimony at the back of his head—he who had said that marriage emas-culates the soul! In the winter of 1828, at a ball in Moscow he was introduced to Natalie Goncharova a sixteen year-old girl of rare beauty. Then, as usual, he was more or less involved emotionally with several married and unmarried women including the bronze Venus of whom his poem "Portrait" is an idealized sketch and a young girl whom he had once called his demon and whom he seriously considered marrying. Nevertheless Natalie made a deep impression on him. The next spring he saw her again and forthwith proposed to her. Since his return from banishment he had made several moves toward matrimony, but for one reason or another they had come to nothing. This time he received an evasive reply. He wrote to the girl's mother (the father was in an insane asylum) to thank her for allowing him to hope and the same day—it was May 1 (O.S.) 1829—he started off on a long trip.

He went to the Caucasus that romantic land which he had first visited a decade earlier but this time he traveled into the heart of the country and further south. One day he came to the frontier and beheld for the first time in his life foreign land. His mount forded the river that formed the border line and carried him onto the Turkish shore. But alas! the territory had just been conquered by Paskevich's troops. It was Pushkin's lot never to escape from the immensities of Russia. He was now near the front—the war was still going on—and having obtained permission to visit his brother who was in active service, he joined the army and had a taste of military life. Indeed he took part in at least one engagement in the informal capacity of half soldier half tourist as he described himself. By autumn he was back in Moscow where he had to take a lecture from Benckendorff whom he had failed to apprise of his moves. His account of this trip is next to his diary and letters the most import ant of his autobiographical writings. His Caucasian impressions are reflected in a group of lyrics written about this time.

The distractions of his travels did not erase the image of Natalie from his mind. For her part she was extremely chilly. He left Moscow, tried to work, and again applied for leave to go abroad or to join a mission to China. The authorities remained adamant. The early spring found him again in Moscow, and on Easter Sunday he proposed once more, and this time was accepted. It was only fitting a friend wrote to him in congratulating him on the event that the foremost romantic poet should marry the foremost romantic beauty of his generation.

Hectic months followed. Pushkin was marrying into a family which was living on the last crumbs of a fortune accumulated in the preceding century by a textile manufacture who had been elevated to the ranks of the gentry. His future mother-in-law, a grasping, meddlesome, bigoted woman, soon decided that she had made a bad bargain and kept on postponing the wedding. She obviously repented having promised her daughter, now a celebrated beauty, to this scribbler with an uncertain income who was moreover under a cloud politically. To placate the Goncharovs on the latter score, Pushkin obtained a statement from Benckendorff to the effect that far from being a political suspect, he was a protégé of the Emperor. He also bestirred himself to raise money. He wished to pay off his gambling debts, which were considerable, and to assure his immediate future, at least. His father settled on him an estate near Boldino in the province of Nizhny Novgorod, so that he was now a landed proprietor and the owner of two hundred male souls. He mortgaged his property forthwith, a good part of the proceeds going to his future mother-in-law, who demanded it so that Natalie might have a dowry. The money was spent chiefly on the bride's trousseau.

It is doubtful if at this time he saw her as she was, an empty-headed frivolous girl without education in intellectual interests or even manners whose accomplishments were limited to dancing, embroidering and a little French. He must, however, have had no illusions about her feelings toward him. At most, she was impressed with his fame. Himself he had like Mme Goncharova his misgivings. He was thirty and Natalie was his one hundred and thirteenth love as he said half in earnest half in jest (the year before his betrothal he jotted down in a girl's album a list of his flames and the catalogue came to thirty-seven items). In spite of a passion for Natalie which allowed him to idealize her as his Madonna and to declare that he would sacrifice his freedom and his pleasure for her sake, more and more often he found himself thinking of the cares of matrimony and the delights of single blessedness.

In the early autumn he went off to Boldino to take formal possession of his estate and with the hope of doing some work in the country. Just before his departure Mme Goncharova had made a particularly distressing scene and he had written to Natalie that she was free. As for himself he added he would either marry her or not marry at all.

You cannot imagine, he wrote to a friend on arriving in Boldino, what a joy it is to have fled far from one's fiancée and to start writing verse. The verse he wrote that autumn includes some of his most famous lyrics such as Elegy, Abandoning an Alien Country, Verses Written During a Sleepless Night.

Autumn (early version) and The Demons, that matchless untranslatable evocation of a snowstorm. In one of the lyrics he sketches sharply the prosy de pressing background of his days Cholera having broken out he was detained at Boldino virtually a prisoner until early in December Neither this nor the uncertainty about his status as a fiance seems to have interfered with his writing Those months perhaps because of their total lack of distraction were his most fruitful season He worked on Eugene Onegin putting the finishing touches to Chapters VII and VIII and starting a new chapter which was to remain a fragment He also polished off The Cottage in Kolomna a narrative poem in that light vein which the poet never ceased to cultivate It is a farcical piece a trifle in the Gallic manner delightful for its humor and its technical felicity and unusual in that it deals with the life of the lower middle class in the capital

The harvest of those months included also four short plays With the exception of The Feast in Time of Plague which is largely a rendering of parts of John Wilson's City of the Plague they are original pieces modeled on the dramatic scenes of Pushkin's English contemporary Barry Cornwall (Bryan Waller Procter) The Coquetish Knight Mozart and Salieri and The Stone Guest are objective psychological studies of three of the original sins greed envy lust The foreign setting (medieval France Germany Spain) is barely indicated the interest centering on the temperamental drive which the protagonist embodies These scenes are written in blank verse but the style is nearer ordinary speech than is the blank verse of Boris Godunov Pushkin could have said with Cornwall One object that I had in view when I wrote these scenes was to try the effect of a more natural style than that which has for a long time prevailed in our dramatic literature Mozart and Salieri the only one of his dramatic compositions staged during his lifetime (in 1832) met with no success

The years of rugged prose constrain me, Pushkin had written at the end of the sixth chapter of Eugene Onegin composed toward the close of his rustic exile. He had previously tried his hand at criticism but it was only the year that followed his release from Mikhailovskoye that he turned to imaginative prose with "The Negro of Peter the Great." This story of the unfortunate marriage of Pushkin's Ethiopian ancestor was conceived on a large scale but after completing the first six chapters he abandoned it. The fragment is of considerable interest as an early character study of a Negro and also as a piece of historical fiction couched in a style reminiscent of pre-romantic French prose. As in "Poltava" Peter is idealized but in a more sober fashion. Having given up the revolutionary velleities of his youth Pushkin pinned his faith to the westernization of Russia and thus became an admirer of the ruler who sought so vigorously to remake the empire in the image of Europe.

It was during his seclusion at Boldino that he turned out his first finished piece of prose The Tales of Belkin. It should be remembered that as a poet Pushkin had a certain tradition to build upon and depart from while as a prose writer he was more truly a pioneer. His performance here calls for an historic rather than an aesthetic evaluation. It is less significant intrinsically than as the foundation of a tradition. He broke new ground both in his use of the language and in his creative response to the life around him. At one time he said that he would like to see the literary language preserve a kind of Biblical baldry, adding that simplicity and coarseness suited the Russian tongue better than European finicalness and French refinement. His own style has the clarity without meanness that Aristotle praised. He found it difficult to forego elegance but in The Tales of Belkin he escaped the rhetoric of his few predecessors

Here he looked away from historical issues and personages and attempted to deal impersonally with contemporary life as lived by people in moderate circumstances. The author chooses to conceal himself behind the pretended story teller who is the merest lay figure. In these stories each character is firmly drawn against his social background, but the tales do not exhibit the imaginative power or possess the psychological significance which would raise them much above the plane of the anecdote. They make agreeable reading but they bear the same relation to the fiction of Pushkin's successors that a pen and ink sketch does to an oil painting.

At last he had to abandon his leisure and the literary activities it allowed. Back in Moscow he somehow made it up with the Goncharovs but soon new quarrels started. He spent New Year's Eve with gypsy singers. A week before his wedding he was writing to a friend that he had decided to get married because it was the usual thing, but he was doing it without rapture, without boyish enchantment, and he would be surprised if the future held any joy for him. He embarrassed the friends whom he entertained on the eve of the ceremony by his extreme dejection. He was cheerful on the day of the wedding. February 18 (O.S.) 1831 but it is said that during the ceremony several incidents occurred which the bridegroom who was very superstitious interpreted as evil omens.

VI

AFTER some unexpectedly happy weeks in Moscow the young couple settled at Tsarskoe Selo the scene of Pushkin's schooldays. He hoped that they might live there quietly and cheaply but he was to be severely disappointed. With the arrival of the Court in the summer, Pushkin found himself singled out for special notice by the Emperor. He was given a sinecure in the Foreign Office which carried with it a salary of 5000 rubles. Natalie too seems to have found favor in the Czar's eyes much to her husband's annoyance. While she gave herself wholly to the social whirl into which they were now caught up, he resented the havoc that the round of gaudies played with his work.

All that he produced during these months was a couple of folk tales in verse and a few lyrics. In the autumn always his most fertile season, he finally wrote finish to Eugene Onegin. He had begun the novel in the ebullient days of his youth, conceiving it as a satirical verse narrative in the Byronic manner. He had been returning to the manuscript on and off for eight years and not unnaturally the piece bears the impress of the changes that life wrought in the author. It is a variable work, passing readily from grave to gay from the cynical to the sentimental, always avoiding rhetoric and occasionally rising to poetry of a high order. There are some passages that are flat and unprofitable but the verse always charms one by its technical felicity. A genial spontaneous performance the narrative makes room for all manner of digressions the author moving in and out of the picture at will introducing his friends when he pleases and freely bringing into the text echoes of and allusions to the work of his contemporaries. In no other piece did he write himself down so fully nor did any other exhibit his genius so comprehensively and effectively. Pushkin's successors were not to write their fictions in verse but they owed to him an awareness of men and women in their social setting a feeling for the minutiae of life in town and country an interest in character for all of which Eugene Onegin is remarkable and which make it the fountainhead of the Russian novel. The opera that Tschaikovsky based upon it added to its enormous popularity.

In addition to the text as Pushkin presented it to the public when it first appeared in its entirety in 1833 there exist fragments of a chapter that was to describe Onegin's travels in Russia. He intended to have it follow Chapter VII so as to make less abrupt the transition from Tatyana the provincial girl to Tatyana the grande dame. Pushkin also began writing a chapter in which the hero after having been repulsed by Tatyana falls in with the Decembrists. He composed as many as sixteen stanzas but fearing that they would get him into trouble with the authorities he destroyed them preserving only the first four lines of each and those in cipher. The opening quatrain is an acidulous thumbnail sketch of Alexander I.

*A monarch weak and also cunning
A top gone bald soil's arrant foe
Whom fame had by strange chance been sunning
Was then our ruler as you know*

During the months at Tsarskoe Selo when he first came into closer contact with Nicholas Pushkin may have had a better opinion of Alexander's successor but his illusions were not to be long lived. When winter came he followed the Court to Petersburg where he was to spend most of his time during the half dozen years that remained to him his trips to the country being rarer than in his bachelor days. He was married a little over a year when his wife presented him with a daughter and she bore him a son the year following but the cares of motherhood nowise lessened her eagerness for the more glittering side of society life. The poet found himself reluctant to accepting the role of the husband of a prima donna. He spent his time escorting the dazzling Natalie to interminable balls dutifully swallowing ices and suppressing yawns. He was attracted by other women including one of his sisters in law and occasionally he sought entertainment in the fashion of his bachelor days, but if he aroused his wife's jealousy, on the whole he was a devoted husband and one who had ample reason to be jealous on his own account. He was annoyed by the attentions shown his coquetish wife and irritated by the company of aristocratic knaves and fools into which he was thrown. As he did not always conceal his sentiments he made enemies in high places.

Pushkin's sinecure allowed him free access to the archives. He took advantage of it to engage in historical research and indeed was thought of as an official historiographer. The past had always attracted him perhaps because he felt himself less restricted in dealing with it. The subject he finally chose to investigate was the Pugachov rebellion the bloody jacquerie which swept across Eastern Russia under Catherine the Great. In the latter part of 1833 he escaped from the hateful social round spending several months in a tour of the Pugachov country.

He had barely returned when the new year brought him an insulting gift in the shape of an appointment to the post of Gentleman of the Bedchamber an honor usually accorded younger men. Pushkin was certain that this rank had been conferred on him so that his wife might attend Court balls without impropriety. The poet was now a courtier. He hated his uniform and referred to it as a jester's motley. He hated the Court and called it a cess pool. Nevertheless he wore the uniform and he attended the Court functions. Furthermore he accepted a subvention from the Czar in order to publish his history of the Pugachov rebel lion Financially his affairs were going from bad to worse His father having become completely insolvent he accepted the burden of managing the family estates He had no means of securing money save by his pen In order to write he needed the leisure and the peace that the life he was living denied him But Natasha would not think of burying herself in the provinces nor could he offend the Czar by running off to the country It was a vicious circle To add to his vexations he discovered that his letters to his wife were being opened by the police

He must put an end to this intolerable dependence for which after all he had himself to thank In June 1834 he made an ineffectual attempt to resign from the service, which only humiliated him further A year later he made another effort to free himself from his entanglement This time he pointed out to the Czar that during his married life he had incurred debts amounting to 60 000 rubles and pleaded for a four years leave of absence so that in retirement he might be free to write and thus mend his fortunes He had to accept a four months leave and a sum of 35 000 rubles which was only nominally a loan The Czar thought it safer to keep the poet under his eye The more Pushkin struggled the more firmly he became enmeshed The financial assistance was of little help Living beyond his means he was reduced to pawning his valuables and he owed money even to his own valet He was aging He was irritable Work was more difficult than ever The year 1835 was particularly sterile He had no paucity of ideas but he kept passing from one thing to another unable to finish anything The one piece he had to show for his labor was a medley of prose and verse Egyptian Nights in itself the merest fragment The critics were burying him Was he indeed played out?

His productivity was diminished during these years. But his finest prose work was just ahead of him and it was not long since he had written some of his most powerful verse. One thinks of "The Bronze Horseman" technically one of his supreme works which he composed in less than a month in the autumn of 1833. Like Poltava it celebrates Peter the Great. Incidentally it is a paean to the city that he had erected on the marshes in defiance of Nature and as proof of his indomitable will. Yet the poet sees not only the greatness of the man who represents Russia's manifest destiny but also the pitiable-ness of the small individual crushed by Leviathan. The vain revolt of the elements symbolized by the Neva flooding the city, is paralleled by the equally futile threats that the crazed little clerk launches at Peter's statue. In the end the reader's feelings are divided between sympathy for the helpless clerk and admiration of the mighty Czar. Whether or not the censors found such sympathy subversive they held the piece to be objectionable, and indeed it became accessible in unexpurgated form only in the present century.

And then there were his verse renderings of folk tales which are among the most precious literary heirlooms of the nation. Pushkin had always been interested in the songs and stories of the unlettered peasantry and had a keen ear for the peculiar turns of folk speech. This gift, combined with his humor and his craftsmanship, allow these five fairy tales to rank with his best work. The Tale of the Pope and His Workman Balda is the gem of the collection but "The Tale of the Golden Cockerel" is better known because of Rimsky Korsakov's opera Cock d'Or which is based upon it. It may be of interest to note that Pushkin derived the story of the magic weathercock from a chapter in Washington Irving's Alhambra, a French translation of which was in his library. About this time notably in 1832-3 Pushkin also wrote The Songs of the Western Slavs which testify to his delight in folk balladry. Many of these pieces are free versions of poems by Prosper Mérimée which he passed off as Serbian folk songs. In spite of their spurious origin Pushkin's Songs have the authenticity of poetry.

In his final period his chief medium was prose. The Queen of Spades written in 1833-4 might have been included among The Tales of Belkin yet it has no body and much greater psychological depth. If there is filiation in literature this story may be regarded as the humble ancestor of Dostoyevsky's subtle master piece Crime and Punishment. Dubrovsky an earlier tale introduces the note somewhat muffled it is true of protest against injustice which was to be echoed so resonantly by later writers beginning with the author of A Sportsman's Sketches. The story is far less important as a Russian variation on the Robin Hood theme than as the earliest story about rural Russia in which the iniquity of the courts and the evils of serfdom are so presented as to suggest that something may be wrong with the system. Perhaps because he realized that it could never pass the censors Pushkin was content to leave the story as it has come down to us in the rough.

The piece that gives Pushkin's measure as a prose writer is The Captain's Daughter practically the last thing that he published. It bears the same relation to his prose that Eugene Onegin does to his verse. A piece of historical fiction which resurrects the age of Catherine it interweaves a family chronicle with an account of the Pugachov rising. The story of young Grinyov's love affair and marriage is a tale such as Pushkin had said he would compose when in defiance of Apollo he ceased to speak the language of the gods.

One can understand why Tolstoy considered it the poet's greatest achievement. Rudimentary and occasionally melodramatic though it is, it has in its small way some of the qualities of War and Peace: the balance, the soundness, the affirmative attitude. It has too the best character drawing that Pushkin ever did and is couched throughout in a chaste and simple style which has been a happy influence upon generations of Russian writers.

Pushkin casts a kind of glamor over the figure of the impostor Pugachov in this novel. Instinctively he sides with the daring rebel, be it the peasant leader of a jacquerie or an outlawed gentleman, as in the case of Dubrovsky, or an heroic bandit like Kirdjali in the story of that name. Yet the social implications of the rebellion, which forms the background of The Captain's Daughter, are slurred over; the most realistic details of the conflict occurring in a portion of the story that was omitted from the final text. Here, as in his scholarly study of the rising, Pushkin's viewpoint is inevitably that of a representative of the class against which Pugachov had taken up arms. "Heaven save us," he has his narrator exclaim, "from seeing a Russian rebellion, senseless and ruthless." In another place he interrupts the narrative to remind his reader that the best and most lasting changes are those which result from a gradual improvement in manners and customs.

In his last years he felt more strongly than ever that the country stood to gain nothing from a violent upheaval. He had the inclinations of a liberal, and his sympathies were with the downtrodden, but he had his doubts about democracy and on at least one occasion he spoke with great scorn of the American experiment. Government by gentlemen, a kind of enlightened absolutism, was not without its appeal for him.

He could exalt the free individual bowing to none, living at his own sweet will admiring Nature and the arts and having no care to meddle with such matters as the making of wars and the imposition of taxes. This naive attitude is expressed in some detail in a didactic poem which is among his last. In another lyric however written at about the same time indifference gives way to indignation against what he calls secular power. And when he came to sum up his life work (in Unto Myself I Reared a Monument) he spoke not as the aesthete who is above the battle but rather as a humane libertarian basing his claim to enduring renown on the fact that with his lyre he had roused kindly sentiments and in a cruel age had celebrated freedom.

VII

THE BEGINNING of 1836 brought the distressed poet a ray of hope. He had long been wanting to publish a magazine, and after much delay he was at length permitted to do so. The enterprise, he thought might prove quite profitable, enabling him to pay off his debts and free himself from his embarrassing dependence on the Czar's bounty. It was his intention to establish, with The Contemporary a solid periodical at once a literary miscellany and a journal of ideas head and shoulders above the public prints of the day. He took for his pattern the English periodicals such as the Edinburgh Review. He knew that he could count on the support of a group of authors some of them young men like Gogol but chiefly writers of the older generation. Naturally he was to be not only the editor but a contributor as well writing special articles and drawing upon his unpublished work.

Though he was engaged in the highest type of journalism Pushkin felt that his undertaking exposed him to all manner of indignities. He had therefore to safeguard the more carefully the venerable name he was bequeathing to his children of whom there were now four. It was the devil's doing he wrote to his wife about this time that he a man with talent and a soul had been born in Russia. He was now more touchy than ever on the subject of his honor. In May he barely avoided a duel with a gentleman who had been overheard talking frivolously with Natalie. She was then giving him another and more serious cause for anxiety. Already in the winter of 1835-6 which was a particularly brilliant season gossip was coupling her name with that of a certain Georges d'Anthes. This dashing young officer of the Guards was a French emigre who was soon to be adopted by Baron Heckeren the Dutch Ambassador to the Russian Court. Although Pushkin trusted his wife her coquetry and the young man's persistent attentions created a trying situation.

The summer was a dismal one. The review proved a sore disappointment. There was not a sufficient public for a serious quarterly such as he was issuing. Moreover some readers felt that he was no longer in the literary vanguard. The money that was needed so badly failed to materialize and what with the censorship and the work connected with the magazine, it was only a source of vexation. His debts were mounting and the demands made on him by his relatives were increasing. Furthermore when autumn came he had to forego his customary retreat to the country. He was unable to work, and he was in a state of irritability which was doubtless aggravated by jealousy of d'Anthes. The latter, in pursuing Natalie had the help of his adoptive father who seems to have played the part of pander while spreading rumors to the effect that Natalie was having a liaison with the Emperor.

Scandal mongers were eager to enlarge upon the Pushkins' quarrels and infidelities.

On November 4 (O.S.) Pushkin received an anonymous letter informing him that the Most Serene Order of Cuckolds had elected him coadjutor to the Grand Master as well as historiographer. It was plain that the purpose of the communication was to insinuate that the new member of the Order had the Czar to thank for his horns. Pushkin's first step was to make an ineffectual attempt to repay the loan he had received from the Czar as a preliminary to severing his relations with the Court. Assuming that Baron Heckeren was responsible for the letter, he then challenged d'Anthes to a duel. The challenge was accepted but Pushkin withdrew it on learning that a match had been arranged between his sister-in-law Catherine Goncharova and his opponent. When pressed to do so, Pushkin declared that in proposing to Catherine, d'Anthes was acting as a man of honor but privately he held to the belief that the marriage was a cowardly dodge to avoid the duel and perhaps intended as a cover for clandestine relations with Natalie. There is some reason to believe that d'Anthes had previously had a liaison with Catherine and that there was urgent cause for hurrying the nuptials which occurred on January 10 (O.S.) 1837.

After the wedding d'Anthes continued to press his attentions upon his newly acquired sister-in-law acting with a boldness that was bound to provoke Pushkin and aided as before by Heckeren. An anonymous letter informing Pushkin that his wife had had a rendezvous with d'Anthes incited him to write a violently abusive letter to the old baron. As a result, d'Anthes challenged Pushkin to a duel which took place on February 8 (January 27 O.S.) 1837. His opponent was only slightly wounded but Pushkin was seriously hurt. Two days later death freed him from Benckendorff's officiousness from the Czar's burden some generosity from the pangs caused by Natalie's careless frivolity from malice and intrigue, espionage and calumny from his own crippling weaknesses. He loved life too well however to have welcomed the bullet which gave him his romantic conceit. And although he made a Christian end one cannot be certain that he had the comfort of a belief in an after life. Yet he achieved immortality of the kind that poets desire—on the lips of living men.

Lyrics and Ballads

Old Man

(After Marot)

I am no more the ardent lover
Who caused the world such vast amaze
My spring is past my summer over
And dead the fires of other days
Oh Eros god of youth! your servant
Was loyal—that you will avow
Could I be born again this moment,
Ah with what zest I'd serve you now!

[1815]

To Chaadayev

Not long we basked in the illusion
Of love, of hope, of quiet fame
Like morning mists a dream's delusion
Youth's pastimes vanished as they came
But still with strong desires burning
Beneath oppression's fateful hand,
The summons of the fatherland
We are impatiently discerning
In hope in torment we are turning Toward freedom waiting her command—
Thus anguished do young lovers stand
Who wait the promised tryst with yearning
While freedom kindles us my friend
While honor calls us and we hear it,
Come to our country let us tend
The noble promptings of the spirit
Comrade, believe joy's star will leap

Upon our sight a radiant token
 Russia will rouse from her long sleep
 And where autocracy lies broken
 Our names shall yet be graven deep

[1818]

To N N

From Aesculapius escaping
 I'm lean and shaven but alive
 His cruel paw no more torments me,
 And there is hope that I may thrive
 Now health the light friend of Priapus
 And sleep are entering my door
 And in my plain and crowded corner
 Repose becomes my guest once more
 Then humor this poor convalescent,
 You too—he longs to see again
 Your face you lawless carefree creature,
 You Pindus lazy citizen
 True son of Freedom and of Bacchus
 Who worships Venus piously
 A masterhand at every pleasure
 From Petersburg society
 Its chilly charms its idle bustle
 Its clacking tongues that nothing stills
 Its various and endless boredom
 I'm summoned by the fields and hills,
 The shady maples in the garden
 The bank of the deserted burn
 The libertie the country offers
 Give me your hand I will return
 At the beginning of October
 We'll drink together once again
 And o'er our cups with friendly candor

Discuss a dozen gentlemen—
 We'll talk of fools and wicked gentry
 And those with flunkies' souls from birth
 And sometimes of the Czar of Heaven,
 And sometimes of the one on earth

[1819]

Gay Feast

I love the festive board
 Where joy's the one presiding
 And freedom my adored
 The banquet's course is guiding
 When Drink! half-drowns the song
 That only morn'ng throttles
 When wide flung is the throng
 And close the jostling bottles

[1819]

✓ A Nereid

Below the dawn flushed sl y where the green billow lies
 Caressing Taurus' flank, I saw a Nereid rise
 Breathless for joy I lay hid in the olive trees
 And watched the demi goddess riding the rosy seas
 The waters lapped about her swan white breast and young
 As from her long soft hair the wreaths of foam she wrung

[1820]

Grapes

I shall not miss the roses fading
As soon as spring's fleet days are done,
I like the grapes whose clusters ripen
Upon the hillside in the sun—
The glory of my fertile valley,
They hang each lustrous as a pearl
Gold autumn's joy oblong transparent,
Like the slim fingers of a girl

[1820]

J I've Lived to Bury My Desires

I've lived to bury my desires
And see my dreams corrode with rust,
Now all that's left are fruitless fires
That burn my empty heart to dust

Struck by the storms of cruel Fate
My crown of summer bloom is sere
Alone and sad I watch and wait
And wonder if the end is near

As conquered by the last cold air,
When winter whistles in the wind,
Alone upon a branch that's bare

[1821]

The Lay of the Wise Oleg

Wise Oleg to the war he hath bouned him again,
The Khozars have awaken'd his ire
For rapine and raid hamlet city and plain
He gives over to falsehood and fire
In mail of Byzance with his host in the rear
The Prince pricks along on his faithful destrier

From the darksome fir forest to meet that array, Forth paces a gray haired magician
To none but Perun did that sorcerer pray,
Fulfilling the prophet's dread mission
His life he had wasted in penance and pain —
And beside that enchanter Oleg drew his rein

Now rede me, enchanter beloved of Perun
The good and the ill that's before me
Shall my foes find a cause for rejoicing right soon
When the earth of the grave is piled o'er me?
Unfold all the truth fear me not and for meed,
Choose among them—I give thee my best battle steed "

Oh enchanter they care not for prince or for peer,
And gifts are but needlessly given
The wise tongue ne'er stumbleth for falsehood or fear
'Tis the friend of the councils of Heaven!
The years of the future are clouded and dark,
Yet on thy fair forehead thy fate I can mark

Remember now firmly the words of my tongue
The warrior delighteth in glory
On the gate of Byzantium thy buckler is hung
Thy conquests are famous in story
Thou holdest dominion o'er land and o'er sea
And the foe views with envy thy great destiny

Not the rage of the deep with its treacherous wave,
At the stroke of the hurricane hour—
Not the knife of the coward the sword of the brave,
To undo thee shall ever have power
Within thy strong harness no wound shalt thou know,
A guardian attends thee where'er thou dost go

Thy steed fears not labor, nor danger nor pain
His lord's lightest accent he heareth
Now still though the arrows fall round him like rain,
Across the red field he careereth,
He fears not the winter, he fears not to bleed—
Yet thy death wound shall come from thy good battle steed!

Oleg smiled a moment, but yet on his brow,
In his eye thought and sorrow were blended
In silence he leaned on his saddle and slow
The Prince from his courser descended
And as though from a friend he were parting with pain
He strokes his broad neck and his dark flowing mane.
Farewell then my comrade, fleet faithful, and bold!
We must part—such is Destiny's power
Now rest thee—I swear in thy stirrup of gold
No foot shall be set from this hour
Farewell! we've been comrades for many a year—
My squires now I pray ye come take my destier
The softest of carpets his horse-cloth shall be
And lead him away to the meadow
On the choicest of corn he shall feed daintily,
He shall drink of the well in the shadow
Then straightway departed the squires with the steed
And to valiant Oleg a fresh courser they lead
Oleg and his comrades are feasting I trow,
The mead-cups are merrily clashing

Their locks are as white as the glimmering snow

When the sun on the grave mound is flashing
They talk of old times of the days of their pride
And the frays where together they struck side by side.

But where quoth Oleg is my good battle horse?
My mettlesome charger—how fares he?
Is he playful as ever as fleet in the course?

His age and his freedom how bears he?
They answer and say on the hill by the stream
He has long slept the slumber that knows not a dream

Oleg bent his head and in thought knit his brow

What hath all thy magic effected?
A false lying dotard Enchanter art thou

Thy counsels I should have rejected
My horse might have borne me till now but for thee
Then the bones of his charger Oleg wished to see

Oleg rode with Igor the Prince at his side

Behind him his spearmen were serried
And there on a slope by the Dnieper's swift tide

Lay the bones of his charger unburied
They are washed by the rain the dust o'er them is cast
And above them the feather grass waves in the blast

Then the Prince set his foot on the courser's white skull

Saying Sleep my old friend in thy glory!
Thy lord hath outlived thee his days are nigh full

At his funeral feast red and gory
'Tis not thou neath the axe that shall redden the sod,
That my dust may be pleased to quaff thy brave blood

And I am to find my destruction in this?

My death in a skeleton seeking?
From the skull of the courser a snake with a hiss

Crept forth, as the hero was speaking
Round his legs like a ribbon it twined its black ring
And the Prince shriek'd aloud as he felt the keen sting

The mead cups are foaming they circle around
At Oleg's mighty death feast they're ringing
Prince Igor and Olga they sit on the mound

The warriors the death song are singing
And they talk of old times, of the days of their pride,
And the frays where together they struck side by side

✓The Coach of Life

Though often somewhat heavy freighted
The coach rolls at an easy pace
And Time, the coachman grizzly pated,
But smart alert—is in his place

We board it lightly in the morning
And on our way at once proceed
Repose and slothful comfort scorning
We shout Hey there! Get on! Full speed!

Noon finds us done with reckless daring
And shaken up Now care's the rule
Down hills through gulleys roughly faring
We sulk and cry Hey easy fool!

The coach rolls on no pitfalls dodging
At dusk to pains more wanted grown
We drowse while to the night's dark lodging
Old coachman Time drives on, drives on

With Freedom's Seed

Behold a sower went forth to sow

With freedom's seed the desert sowing
 I walked before the morning star
 From pure and guiltless fingers throwing—
 Where slavish plows had left a scar—
 The fecund seed the procreator
 Oh vain and sad disseminator
 I learned then what lost labors are Graze if you will you peaceful nations
 Who never rouse at honor's horn!
 Should flocks heed freedom's invocations?
 Their part is to be slain or shorn
 Their dower the yoke their sires have worn
 Through snug and sheeplike generations [1823]

Beneath Her Native Skies

Beneath her native skies she languished and she drooped

And now she has at last departed
Perchance the fair young ghost a moment o'er me stooped

A shadow broken hearted

But twixt us twain is drawn a line I may not cross
How strange seems now the old devotion!

Indifferent lips were those that told me of my loss
I heard of it without emotion

So that is she who set my careless heart afire,
And whom I loved with tender sadness Toward whom I strained consumed with anguish and desire

Who brought me to the verge of madness!

Where is the pain and where the love that hurt me most?

Sweet memories awhile outlive you
But not for long you credulous poor ghost—
I've no remorse, no tears to give you

Winter Evening

Storm clouds dim the sky the tempest
Weaves the snow in patterns wild
Like a beast the gale is howling
And now wailing like a child
On the worn old roof it rustles
The piled thatch and then again

Like a traveler belated
Knocks upon the window pane
Sad and dark our shabby cottage
Indoors not a sound is heard
Nanny sitting at the window
Can't you give me just a word?
What is wrong dear? Are you wearied
By the wind so loud and rough?
Or the buzzing of your distaff—
Has that set you dozing off?

Let us drink dear old companion
You who shared my sorry start
Get the mug and drown our troubles
That's the way to cheer the heart
Sing the ballad of the titmouse
Who beyond the seas was gone
Or the song about the maiden
Fetching water just at dawn
Storm-clouds dim the sky the tempest
Weaves the snow in patterns wild
Like a beast the gale is howling
And now wailing like a child
Let us drink dear old companion
You who shared my sorry start
Get the mug and drown our troubles,
That's the way to cheer the heart

The Prophet

Athirst in spirit through the gloom
Of an unpeopled waste I blundered
And saw a six-winged seraph loom
Where the two pathways met and sundered.

He laid his fingers on my eyes
His touch lay soft as slumber lies—
And like an eagle's his crag shaken,
Did my prophetic eyes awaken
Upon my ears his fingers fell
And sound rose—stormy swell on swell
I heard the spheres revolving chiming
The angels in their soaring sweep
The monsters moving in the deep
The green vine in the valley climbing
And from my mouth the seraph wrung
Forth by its roots my sinful tongue
The evil things and vain it babbled
His hand drew forth and so effaced
And the wise serpent's tongue he placed Between my lips with hand blood-dabbled
And with a sword he clove my breast
Plucked out the heart he made beat higher,
And in my stricken bosom pressed
Instead a coal of living fire
Upon the wastes a lifeless clod,
I lay and heard the voice of God
Arise oh prophet watch and hearken
And with my Will thy soul engird
Roam the gray seas the roads that darken
And burn men's hearts with this, my Word

[1826]

Message to Siberia

Deep in the Siberian mine
Keep your patience proud
The bitter toil shall not be lost
The rebel thought unbowed

The sister of misfortune Hope
In the under-darkness dumb
Speaks joyful courage to your heart
The day desired will come

And love and friendship pour to you
Across the darkened doors
Even as round your galley beds
My free music pours

The heavy hanging chains will fall,
The walls will crumble at a word
And Freedom greet you in the light
And brothers give you back the sword

[1827]

Arion

We numbered many in the ship
Some spread the sails some pulled together
The mighty oars 'twas placid weather
The rudder in his steady grip
Our helmsman silently was steering
The heavy galley through the sea
While I from doubts and sorrows free
Sang to the crew When suddenly
A storm! and the wide sea was rearing
The helmsman and the crew were lost
No sailor by the storm was tossed Ashore—but I who had been singing
I chant the songs I loved of yore
And on the sunned and rocky shore
I dry my robes all wet and clinging

Three Springs

Three springs in life's immense and joyless desert
Mysteriously rise and hurry on
The spring of youth unsteady and rebellious,
Bubbling and seething tosses boils is gone
Life's exiles at the bright Castalian fountain
Drink draughts more pure more heady than the first
But 'tis the deep cold wellspring of oblivion
That slakes most sweetly ecstasy and thirst.

Remembrance

When noisy day no more assails the ears of men
And on the silent city slowly
Night's pallid shadow falls, while after toil again
The wage of sleep repays them wholly—
Then in the hush my hours drag out their dismal course
No peace my weary vigils bring me
But through the listless night the serpents of remorse
With piercing fangs more shrewdly sting me
Obsessed by seething dreams the overburdened soul
Can neither bear its pain nor cure it
In silence Memory unwind her lengthy scroll
Before me, and I must endure it
And loathing it I read the record of the years,
I curse and tremble like one baited
For all my bitter groans for all my bitter tears
The lines are not obliterated

Casual Gift

(May 26 1828)

Casual gift oh gift inutile
 Life, why wert thou given me?
 Why should fate thus grant us futile
 Terms of doomed mortality?
 Did a cruel power fashion
 Beings for itself to flout?
 Who thus storms my soul with passion?
 Who thus fills my mind with doubt?
 Goal there can be none before me
 Empty hearted idle willed
 Life's monotony rolls o'er me
 Tired with longings unfulfilled

The Man I Was of Old

Tel j'étais autrefois et tel je suis encor

The man I was of old that man I still remain Lighthearted, soon in love You know my friends tis vain
 To think I can behold the fair without elation
 And timid tenderness and secret agitation Has love not played with me and teased me quite enough?
 In Cytherea's nets wrought of such sturdy stuff Like a young hawk have I not struggled long and striven?
 Unchastened by the pangs whereby I have been driven Unto new idols I my old entreaues bring

The Upas Tree

Within the desert like a scar
On wastes the heat has desolated,
Like a dread sentry an antiar,
From all the world stands isolated

Nature who made the thirsting plains,
Upon a day of anger bore it
And root and branch and inmost veins,
With foulest poison did she store it

Down through the bark the poison drips,
To melt as noontide sunlight quickens,
But when the sun at evening dips,
Into transparent pitch it thickens

No bird upon those boughs draws breath,
No tiger nears—the tempest solely Dares run upon that tree of death
And then flies onward poisoned wholly

And if its foliage be bedewed
By some stray cloud above it roaming
The rain from poisoned branches spewed
Falls on the sands with venom foaming

But by a man a man was sent To the antiar a look commanded
He brought the venom virulent
Back from the tree that Fate had branded.

He brought the deathly pitch and yet
Besides a withered bough he carried
In chilly drops the dreadful sweat
Poured from his face his look was harried

Upon a bed of bast he lay,
The stricken bearer of disaster,

And perished that he might obey
His calm unconquerable master

And in the pitch the mighty Czar
His arrows soaked without contrition,
And to his neighbors near and far
He sped the couriers of perdition

When she, the fiery souled appears

She flies against them bright and daring
And spends herself and falling scars

Lovely Youth

Camp on the Euphrates

Lovely youth when war-drums rattle
Be not ravished seal your ears
Do not leap into the battle
With the crowd of mountaineers
Well I know that death will shun you
And that where the sabres fly
Azrael will look upon you
Note your beauty and pass by!
But the war will be unsparing
You I fear must suffer harm—
Lose your timid grace of bearing Lose your shy and languid charm

✓ I Loved You Once

I loved you once nor can this heart be quiet
 For it would seem that love still lingers here
 But do not you be further troubled by it,
 I would in no wise hurt you oh my dear

I loved you without hope a mute offender
 What jealous pangs what shy despairs I knew!
 A love as deep as this as true as tender,
 God grant another may yet offer you

Here's Winter

Here's winter Far from town what shall we do? I question

The servant bringing in my morning cup of tea How is the weather—warm? Not storming? The ground's covered

With leathery fresh snow? Come is it best to be Astride a horse at once or rather until dinner
 Shall we stay in and thumb the neighbor's old reviews?

The snow is fresh and fine We rise and mount our horses

And trot through fields whose gleam the early light renews

We carry whips the dogs run close behind our stirrups

With careful eyes we search the snow we scour the plain

For tracks ride round and round and tardily at twilight

After we've missed two hares at last turn home again

How jolly! Evening comes without the storm is howling

The candle light is dim The heart is wrenched with pain

Slow drop by drop I drink my boredom's bitter poison
I try a book The eyes glide down the page—in vain
My thoughts are far away and so I close the volume

Sit down take up my pen I force my Muse to say
Some incoherent words but harmony is wanting Sounds do not chime together where now is my sway

Over my rhyme? I can't control this curious hand maid

The verse is shapeless cold so lame it cannot walk

So I dismiss the Muse I am too tired to quarrel

I go into the parlor where I hear them talk

About the sugar works about the next election

The hostess like the weather frowns her only arts

Are plying rapidly her long steel knitting needles

Or telling people's fortunes by the king of hearts

What boredom! Thus the days go by in lonely sequence!

But if while I play draughts on a gray evening

Into our dreary village a closed sledge or carriage

Some unexpected guests should oddly chance to bring

Say an old woman and two girls her two young daughters

(Tall fair haired creatures both) the place that was so dull

So God forsaken all at once is bright and lively

And suddenly good heavens! life grows rich and full!

Attentive sidelong looks by a few words are followed

There's talk then friendly laughter and songs when lamps are lit

And after giddy waltzes there come languid glances

There's whispering at table sly and ready wit,
 Upon the narrow stairs a lingering encounter,
 When twilight falls a girl steals from her wonted place
 And out onto the porch bare-throated chest uncovered—
 The wind is up, the snow blows straight into her face!
 But never mind! Our fair is heedless of the snow storm
 Unhurt in northern blasts the Russian rose will blow
 How hotly burns a kiss in keen and frosty weather!
 How fresh a Russian girl abloom in gusts of snow!

Stanzas

Along the noisy streets I wander,
 A church invites me it may be,
 Or with mad youths my time I squander,
 And still these thoughts are haunting me
 This year will fly the next will follow
 As fast and all whom you see here
 Eternity will swiftly swallow
 For some the hour is drawing near When I behold a lone oak thriving
 I think when I age and decay
 This patriarch will be surviving
 As it survived my father's day
 If I caress a babe, I'm thinking
 Thus soon Farewell! I must make room
 For you and out of sight be sinking—
 My time to fade is yours to bloom
 Each day, each year in thought addressing,
 I ask in turn as it goes past

How it will be remembered guessing
Which will be reckoned as my last

And when fate strikes where will it find me?
In battle, on the road at sea?
Will that near valley be assigned me
Where my cold clay at home may be?

The witless body's unaffected
Nor reck's where it decays tis clear
Yet in my heart I have elected
To rest near places once held dear

At the grave's portals, unrepining
May young life play and where I lie
May heedless Nature still be shining
With beauty that shall never die.

✓ To the Poet

Thou shalt not, poet, prize the people's love
The noise of their applause will quickly die
Then shalt thou hear the judgment of the fool
And chilling laughter from the multitude.
But stand thou firm untroubled and austere
Thou art a king and kings must live alone
Thine own free spirit calls to thee pass on Make perfect the fair blossom of thy dreams
Nor ask for praises of achievement won
Praise lives within tis thou that art the judge
And thine the strictest judgment of them all Art thou content? Then leave the herd to howl
Leave them to spit upon thine altar fires
And on the dancing incense of thy shrine

[1830]

Madonna

Not by old masters rich on crowded walls,
 My house I ever sought to ornament
 That gaping guests might marvel whi'e they leant
 To connoisseurs with condescending drawls
 Amidst slow labors far from garish halls
 Before one picture I would fain have spent Eternity where the calm canvas thralls
 As though the Virgin and the Saviour hent
 From regnant clouds the Glorious and the Wise
 The meek and hallowed with unearthly eyes,
 Beneath the palm of Zion these alone
 My wish is granted God has shown thy face
 To me here my Madonna thou shalt throne
 Most pure exemplar of the purest grace

[1830]

Elegy

The mirth now dead that once was madly bubbling
 Like fumes of last night's cups is vaguely troubling
 Not so the griefs that to those years belong
 Like wine, I find with age they grow more strong
 My path is bleak—before me stretch my morrows
 A tossing sea foreboding toil and sorrows
 And yet I do not wish to die be sure
 I want to live—think suffer and endure
 And I shall know some savor of elation
 Amidst the cares the woes and the vexation
 At times I shall be drunk on music still Or at a moving tale my eyes will fill,
 And as sad dusk folds down about my story
 Love's farewell smile may shed a parting glory

[1830]

My Critic, Rosy-Gilled

My critic rosy gilled who are so quick to offer
Our gloomy Muse affront you plump pot bellied scoffer

Come here I beg sit down and have a little nip
Together we may get the better of the hyp
Behold the view a row of wretched huts and ponder
The black earth of the plain that slopes behind them yonder

Above the hovels hang low clouds thick massed and gray

But the bright meadows friend the dark woods—where are they?

Where is the stream? Beside the low fence in the court

Two trees rejoice the eye they're of a meager sort
Such pitiable things the two of them together

And one is stripped quite bare by autumn's rainy weather

The other's yellow leaves wait sopping to be strewn
On puddles by the wind that will be raging soon

There's not a living cur True here a peasant trudges
Across the empty court and at his heels two drudges
The coffin of a child beneath his arm no hat

Upon his head—he calls to the priest's lazy brat
To bid his dad unlock the church— You've legs to run with!

Be quick! We're late—high time the funeral were done with!

Why do you frown my friend? You've kept this up too long

Can't you amuse us with a merry sort of song?

Where are you off to now? To Moscow, I am setting—

Out for the birthday ball But are you quite for getting
 That we are quarantined? The cholera's with us
 Come cool your heels here as in the grim Caucasus
 Your humble servant did—there's nothing else to do now
 Well brother you don't scoff so you've got the hyp too now!

[1830]

For One Last Time

For one last time I am embracing
 Your image all but lost to me
 The heart is eager to be tracing
 A dream that time will be effacing
 And dwells upon love's memory
 Our years roll onward ever changing
 They change and we change in the end—
 Far from your poet you are ranging
 And darkness like the grave's estranging
 Has rapt you from that passionate friend
 This heart its leave of you has taken
 Accept, my distant dear love's close
 As does the wife death leaves forsaken
 As does the exile's comrade shaken
 And mute, who clasps him once, and goes

Verses Written During a Sleepless Night

Sleep evades me there's no light
 Darkness wraps the earth with slumber,
 Only weary tickings number

The slow hours of the night
 Parca chattering woman fashion
 Night that offers no compassion
 Life that stirs like rustling mice—
 Why enrage me in your vise?
 Why the whispering insistence—
 Are you but the pale persistence
 Of a day departed twice?
 What black failures do you reckon?
 Do you prophesy or beckon?
 I would know whence you are sprung
 I would study your dark tongue

✓ Abandoning an Alien Country

Abandoning an alien country
 You sought your distant native land
 How could I stop the tears at parting
 When sorrow was beyond command?
 With hands that momentarily grew colder
 I tried to hold you wordlessly
 I begged that our farewells our anguish,
 Might be prolonged eternally

But from the bitter kiss and clinging
 You tore away your lips and from The gloomy land of lonely exile

To a new country bade me come
You said When we are reunited,
Beneath a sky of endless blue,
In the soft shadow of the olives,
Then lip to lip, I'll solace you

But yonder where the blue is radiant
And where the olives from the shore
Cast tender shadows on the waters,
You fell asleep to wake no more
The funeral urn alas is holding
Your beauty and your sorrow now,
But the sweet kiss of our reunion
I wait—I hold you to your vow

Work

Here is the long bided hour the labor of years is accomplished
Why should this sadness unplumbed secretly weigh on my heart?
Is it my work being done, I stand like a laborer use-

One who has taken his pay a stranger to tasks that are new?
Is it the work I regret the silent companion of midnight
Friend of the golden haired Dawn friend of the gods of the hearth?

♪ When in My Arms

When in my arms your slender beauty
 Is locked O you whom I adore,
 And from my lips between the kisses,
 Love's tender words delight to pour
 In silence from my tight embraces
 Your supple form you gently free
 And with a skeptic's smile my dear one
 You mockingly reply to me
 The sad tradition of betrayal
 You have remembered all too well
 You listen dully scarcely heeding
 A syllable of what I tell
 I curse the zeal the crafty ardors
 I curse the criminal delight
 Of youth and the appointed meetings
 The garden trysts in the hushed night
 I curse the whispered lovers' discourse
 The magic spells that lay in verse
 The gullible young girls' caresses
 Their tears their late regrets I curse

 When writhing like a snake in my embrace she lies

And wounding kiss and touch urgent and hot, engender

The final shudderings that consummate surrender

How sweeter far are you, my meek my quiet one—
By what tormenting bliss is my whole soul undone
When after I have long and eagerly been pleading
With bashful graciousness to my deep need conceding
You give yourself to me, but shyly turned away }
To all my ardors cold, scarce heeding what I say, }
Responding growing warm oh in how slow a fash-

Autumn

(Fragment)

What does not enter then my drowsy mind ?
Derzhavin

I

October comes at last The grove is shaking
The last reluctant leaves from naked boughs
The autumn cold has breathed the road is freezing—
The brook still sounds behind the miller's house
But the pond's hushed now with his pack my neighbor
Makes for the distant field—his hounds will rouse
The woods with barking and his horse's feet
Will trample cruelly the winter wheat

II

This is my time! What is the Spring to me?
Thaw is a bore mud running thick and stinking—
Spring makes me ill my mind is never free
From dizzy dreams, my blood is in constant ferment.
Give me instead Winter's austerity
The snows under the moon—and what is gayer
Than to glide lightly in a sleigh with her
Whose fingers are like fire beneath the fur?

III

And oh, the fun, steel shod to trace a pattern
In crystal on the river's glassy face!
The shining sur of festivals in winter!
But there's a limit—nobody could face
Six months of snow—even that cave-dweller,
The bear would growl "enough" in such a case.
Sleigh rides with young Armidas pall, by Jove,
And you turn sour with loafing by the stove.

Oh darling Summer I could cherish you
If heat and dust and gnats and flies were banished
These dull the mind the heart grows weary too
We like the meadows, suffer drought thought withers
Drink is our only hope, and how we rue
Old woman Winter at whose funeral banquet
Pancakes and wine were served but now we hold Memorial feasts of ices sweet and cold

V

They say all things of the last days of Autumn
But I friend reader not a one will hear
Her quiet beauty touches me as surely

As does a wistful child to no one dear
She can rejoice me more I tell you frankly,
Than all the other seasons of the year
I am a humble lover and I could Find singularly, much in her that's good

How shall I make it clear? I find her pleasing
As you perhaps may like a sickly girl
Condemned to die and shortly who is drooping
Without a murmur of reproach to hurl
At life forsaking her—upon her paling
Young lips a little smile is seen to curl
She does not hear the grave's horrific yawn
Today she lives—tomorrow she is gone

Oh mournful season that delights the eyes,
Your farewell beauty captivates my spirit
I love the pomp of Nature's fading dyes
The forests garmented in gold and purple,
The rush of noisy wind and the pale skies
Half hidden by the clouds in darkling billows,
And the rare sun ray and the early frost,
And threats of grizzled Winter heard and lost

VIII

Each time that Autumn comes I bloom afresh
For me I find the Russian cold is good
Again I go through life's routine with relish
Sleep comes in season and the need for food
Desire seethes—and I am young and merry,
My heart beats fast with lightly leaping blood
I'm full of life—such is my organism
(If you will please excuse the prosaism)

IX

My horse is brought far out onto the plain
He carries his glad rider and the frozen
Dale echoes to his shining hooves his mane
Streams in the keen wind like a banner blowing
And the bright ice creaks under him again
But day soon flickers out At the forgotten
Hearth where the fire purrs low or leaps like wind,
I read or nourish long thoughts in my mind

X

And I forget the world in the sweet silence,
While I am lulled by fancy and once more
The soul oppressed with the old lyric fever
Trembles reverberates and seeks to pour
Its burden freely forth and as though dreaming
I watch the children that my visions bore,
And I am host to the invisible throngs
Who fill my reveries and build my songs

XI

And thoughts stir bravely in my head and rhymes
Run forth to meet them on light feet, and fingers
Reach for the pen and the good quill betimes
Asks for the foolscap Wait the verses follow
Thus a still ship sleeps on still seas Hark Chimes!
And swiftly all hands leap to man the rigging
The sails are filled they belly in the wind—
The monster moves—a foaming track behind

XII

It sails but whither is it our ship goes?

Funeral Song

God be your guide on the long rough way!
No fear praise God that you go astray
The night is clear and the moon is up
Set down, set down the empty cup

The bullet is quick and fever slow
You died as you lived—free
Your foe fled when he d struck the blow,
But your son was swift as he

Brother do not forget us now
And when somehow you meet,
Greet our father for me and bow
Bow down before his feet

Tell him my wound is already healed
The pains are past and done
Tell him when I came back from the field
My wife had borne me a son

For grandfather s sake we named him Yan
He is a clever lad
Already he wields a yataghan
And his rifle shot s not bad

My daughter lives at Lasgora she Has not tired of the man she wed
Tvark long since went down to the sea—
You ll learn if he s living or dead

God be your guide on the long rough way!
No fear, praise God that you go astray
The night is clear and the moon is up
Set down set down the empty cup

I Visited Again

I visited again

That corner of the earth where once I spent,
In placid exile two unheeded years
A decade's gone since then—and in my life
There have been many changes—in myself
Who from the general law am not exempt
There have been changes too—but here once more
The past envelops me and suddenly
It seems that only yesterday I roamed
These groves

Here stands the exile's cottage where I lived with my poor nurse The good old woman
Has passed away—no longer do I hear
Through the thin wall her heavy tread as she Goes on her busy rounds

Here is the hill
Upon whose wooded crest I often sat
Unstirring staring down upon the lake—
Recalling as I looked with melancholy
Another shore, and other waves I knew
Among the golden meadows the green fields,
It stretches its blue breadth the same still lake
A fisherman across its lonely waters
Is rowing now and dragging in his wake
A wretched net Upon the sloping shores
Are scattered hamlets—and beyond them there
A mill squats crookedly—it scarcely stirs
Its wings in this soft wind

Upon the edge
Of the ancestral acres on the spot
Where the rough road trenched by the heavy rains.

Begins its upward climb three pine trees rise—
One stands apart, and two are close together
And I remember how of moonlight nights,
When I rode past their rustling greeted me
Like a familiar voice I took that road
I saw the pines before me once again
They are the same, and on the ear the same
Familiar whisper breaks from shaken boughs
But at the base, beside their aged roots
(Where I remembered only barrenness),
Has sprung a fair young grove and I observe
A verdant family the bushes crowd
Like children in their shadow And apart,
Alone as ever their glum comrade stands
Like an old bachelor about whose feet
There stretches only bareness as before
I hail you race of youthful newcomers!
I shall not witness your maturity
When you shall have outgrown my ancient friends,
And with your shoulders hide their very heads
From passers by But let my grandson hear
Your wordless greeting when as he returns
Content light hearted from a talk with friends
He too rides past you in the dark of night,
And thinks perhaps of me

[1835]

Tis Time, My Friend

Tis time my friend tis time! The heart for rest is crying—
The days go by each hour bears off as it is flying
A shred of our existence—we two we plan to live
But death may come how soon? And joy is fugitive

Not happiness but peace and freedom may be granted
On earth this is my hope who by one dream am haunted—

A weary slave, I plan escape before the night
To the remote repose of toil and pure delight [1836 (?)]

Secular Power

When the supreme event had at long last transpired
And God upon the cross in agony expired
On either side the Tree two looked on one another One Mary Magdalene, and one the Virgin Mother—

In grief two women stood

But now whom do we see beneath the holy rood
As though it were the porch of him who rules the city—

Not here the holy twain borne down by pain and pity

But shakos on their heads and bayonet in hand
Beside the crucifix two bristling sentries stand
Are they set here to guard the cross as twere State cargo?

Is it on mice or thieves you thus lay an embargo?
Would you add dignity unto the King of kings?
What honor do you think your patronage thus brings
You mighty of the earth what help by you is rendered
To Him who's crowned with thorns to Him who freely tendered

His body to the scourge without complaint or fear
The Christ who had to bear the cross the nails the spear?

Fear you the mob's affront to Him who won remission,

Whose death has saved the race of Adam from perdition?

Is it to keep the way for strolling gentry clear
That thus the common folk are not admitted here?
[1836]

Pure Men, and Women Too

Pure men, and women too all of the world unspotted,
That they might reach the heights to holy saints allotted

That they might fortify the heart against life's stress
Composed such prayers as still comfort us and bless
But none has ever stirred in me such deep emotions
As that the priest recites at Lenten devotions,
The words which mark for us that saddest season rise
Most often to my lips and in that prayer lies
Support ineffable when I a sinner hear it

Thou Lord of all my life avert Thou from my spirit
Both idle melancholy and ambition's sting
That hidden snake and joy in foolish gossiping
But let me see O God my sins and make confession
So that my brother be not damned by my transgression,
And quicken Thou in me the breath and being of Both fortitude and meekness chastity and love

[1836]

In Vain I Seek to Flee

In vain I seek to flee to Zion's lofty height
Rapacious sin pursues alert to watch my flight
'Tis thus with nostrils thrust in yielding sandy hollows

The shy deer's pungent spoor the hungry lion follows.
[1836]

When, Lost in Thought

When lost in thought I roam beyond the city's bounds

And find myself within the public burial grounds
The fashionable tombs behind the railing squatting
Where the great capitals uncouth dead are rotting
All huddled in a swamp a crowding teeming horde
Like greedy guests that swarm about a beggar's board
Officials sepulchers and merchants too all fizzes
The clumsy products of inept vulgar chisels
Inscribed in prose and verse with virtues service rank
Outlandish ornaments displayed on either flank
A widow's fond lament for an old cuckold confined The urns screwed from their posts by thieves the earth that's softened

And slippery where graves are gaping dark and wide
To welcome tenants who next day will move inside—
All this brings troubled thoughts I feel my spirits fail me

As I survey the scene and evil blues assail me
One wants to spit and run!

But what calm pleasure lies—
When rural autumn sheds its peace from evening skies—

In seeing the churchyard where solemnly reposing
Among their ancestors the country dead are dozing!
There, unadorned the graves have ample elbow room
At midnight no pale thief creep forth to rob the tomb
The peasant sighs and says a prayer as he passes
The time worn stones overgrown with yellowed moss and grasses

No noseless angels soar no blowsy Graces here,
No petty pyramids or idle urns appear

But a broad oak above these dignified graves brooding
Bestirs its boughs in music

[1836]

Unto Myself I Reared a Monument

Exegi monumentum

Unto myself I reared a monument not builded
By hands a track thereto the people's feet will tread
Not Alexander's shaft is lofty as my pillar
That proudly lifts its splendid head

Not wholly shall I die—but in the lyre my spirit
Shall incorruptible and bodiless survive—
And I shall know renown as long as under heaven
One poet yet remains alive

The rumor of my fame will sweep through vasty
Russia

And all its peoples speak this name whose light shall reign

Alike for haughty Slav and Finn and savage Tungus,
And Kalmuck riders of the plain

I shall be loved and long the people will remember
The kindly thoughts I stirred—my music's brightest crown

How in this cruel age I celebrated freedom
And begged for ruth toward those cast down

Oh Muse as ever now obey your God's command ments

Of insult unafraid to praise and slander cool
Demanding no reward sing on but in your wisdom
Be silent when you meet a fool

[1836]

NOTES

To Chaadayev—Pushkin was at school when he met Pyotr Chaadayev who was then an officer in a hussar regiment stationed at Tsarskoe Selo. Eventually Chaadayev gave up the liberalism of his youth and turned mystic. In middle life he published a series of essays in which he denied the greatness of his country and in consequence was officially declared insane. See also note to Eugene Onegin Ch. I, stanza xxv, 1-5.

With Freedom's Seed — This is my last liberal raving. Pushkin wrote in a letter from Odessa dated Dec. 1 (O.S.), 1823 alluding to his poem on the death of Napoleon: "I have given up all that and the other day I wrote an imitation of the parable by that moderate democrat, Jesus Christ." The poem "With Freedom's Seed" is transcribed therewith. In a rough draft of this letter he said that he had written his imitation as he looked about him and cast a glance at Western Europe. The early twenties witnessed the triumph of political reaction on the continent.

Epigram I—This shaft was directed against Pushkin's superior at Odessa.

Winter Evening—The Nanny of this poem is Pushkin's old nurse Anna, his companion during his confinement at Mikhailovskoye. Another reference to her occurs in the poem "I visited again."

The Prophet—Cf Isaiah VI 1-10.

Message to Siberia—This poem addressed to the Decembrists was published posthumously.

Casual Gift—May 26 1828 was Pushkin's twenty ninth birthday

The Man I Was of Old—The epigraph is from Andre Chenier

Verses Written During a Sleepless Night—It is believed that Zhukovsky the editor of this posthumously published lyric is responsible for the last line, and that as Pushkin originally wrote it, it ran simply I seek your meaning

On the Translation of the Iliad—The translation referred to was made by Nikolay Gnedich who devoted seventeen years to the task

Work—Probably occasioned by the completion of Eugene Onegin

No Never Think—This lyric, which was published posthumously may have been written in 1830 in which case the lady is not as has been thought the poet's wife

Funeral Song—One of the Songs of the Western Slavs adapted by Pushkin from Merimee's literary forgery La Guzla in the belief that it was genuine Merimee attributed this piece to Hyacinthe Maglanovich an Illyrian minstrel who was a figment of his imagination

Secular Power—The reference is to The Crucifixion a canvas by K. P. Bryullov exhibited in Petersburg in 1856 sentries were placed about it to keep off the crowd

Pure Men and Women Too—The prayer referred to was composed by St Ephraim the Syrian who flourished in the fourth century

Narrative Poems

POLTAVA

(From Canto III)

The East is bright with dawn Already
 From field and hill the cannon roars
 The purple smoke in swirl and eddy
 Toward a cloudless heaven soars
 To meet the beams that morning pours
 The ranks are closed The marksmen seat er—
 They lie awhile in ambush yet
 The balls go rolling bullets spatter
 And coldly slants the bayonet
 The Swede long crowned with Victory's favors,
 Tears through the trench fire nor wavers
 The frantic cavalry in force
 Rides forth—the infantry impassive,
 With solid head and firm front massive Moves forward to support the horse
 And here the battlefield is burning
 And there with fatal thunder lours
 But now the tide of war is turning
 And fortune it is plain is ours
 Rebuffs from every quarter meeting
 The troop are strewn about the field
 Rosen goes through the pass retreating
 And fiery Schlippenbach must yield
 We crowd the Swedes about them rattles
 The din of war their banners shake
 Beclouded as the God of Battles
 Sheds grace on every move we make

Then like the voice of Heaven, urging
The victors, Peter's voice sounds clear
Now, with God's help to work! And here,
His favorites about him surging
Comes Peter from the tent His eyes
Dart fire his face commands surrender,
His steps are swift The tempest's splendor
Alone with Peter's splendor vies
He goes They bring his charger panting
High strung yet ready to obey,
He scents the fire of the fray
And quivers Now with eyeballs slanting
Into the dust of war he fares,
Proud of the rider that he bears

Noon nears The blazing heat bores deeper
The battle rests—a tired reaper
The Co. steeds paraded shine
The regiments fall in a line
No martial music is redounding
And from the hills the hungry roar
Of the calmed cannon breaks no more
And lo! across the plain resounding
A deep Hurrah! rolls from afar
The regiments have seen the Czar

THE BRONZE HORSEMAN

A Petersburg Tale 1833

FOREWORD

The occurrence related in this tale is based on fact. The details of the flood are taken from the journals of the day. The curious may consult the account composed by V. I. Berkh¹

INTRODUCTION

There, by the billows desolate
He stood with mighty thoughts elate,
And gazed out in the distance only
A sorry skiff on the broad spate
Of Neva drifted seaward lonely
The moss grown mury banks with rare
Hovels were dotted here and there
Where wretched Finns for shelter crowded,
The murmuring woodlands had no share
Of sunshine all in mist beshrouded

And thus He mused From here indeed
Shall we strike terror in the Swede
And here a city by our labor
Founded shall gall our haughty neighbor
Here cut—so Nature gives command—
Your window through on Europe stand
Firm footed by the sea unchanging¹
Ay, ships of every flag shall come
By waters they had never swum
And we shall revel freely ranging

A century—and that city young
Gem of the Northern world, amazing,
From gloomy wood and swamp upsprung,
Had risen in pride and splendor blazing
Where once by that low lying shore
In waters never known before
The Finnish fisherman sole creature
And left forlorn by stepdame Nature
Cast ragged nets—today, along
Those shores astir with life and motion,
Vast shapely palaces in throng
And towers are seen from every ocean
From the world's end the ships come fast.
To reach the loaded quays at last
The Neva now is clad in granite
With many a bridge to overspan it
The islands lie beneath a screen
Of gardens deep in dusky green
To that young capital is drooping
The crest of Moscow on the ground,
A dowager in purple, stooping
Before an empress newly crowned

I love thee city of Peter's making
I love thy harmonies austere
And Neva's sovran waters breaking Along her banks of granite sheer Thy traceried iron gates thy sparkling
Yet moonless meditative gloom
And thy transparent twilight darkling
And when I write within my room
Or lampless read—then sunk in slumber,
The empty thoroughfares past number
Are piled stand clear upon the night,
The Admiralty spire is bright
Nor may the darkness mount, to smother
The golden cloudland of the light

For soon one dawn succeeds another
With barely half an hour of night
I love thy ruthless winter lowering
With bitter frost and windless air
The sledges along Neva scouring
Girls' cheeks—no rose so bright and fair!
The flash and noise of balls the chatter
The bachelor's hour of feasting too
The cups that foam and huss and spatter,
The punch that in the bowl burns blue
I love the warlike animation
On playing fields of Mars to see
The troops of foot and horse in station,
And their superb monotony
Their ordered undulating muster,
Flags tattered on the glorious day
Those brazen helmets in their lustre
Shot through and riddled in the fray
I love thee, city of soldiers blowing Smoke from thy forts thy booming gun
—A Northern empress is bestowing
Upon the royal house a son!
Or when another battle won
Proud Russia holds her celebration
Or when the Neva breaking free
Her dark blue ice bears out to sea
And scents the spring in exultation

Now city of Peter stand thou fast
Foursquare like Russia vaunt thy splendor!
The very element shall surrender
And make her peace with thee at last
Their ancient bondage and their rancors
The Finnish waves shall bury deep
Nor vex with idle spite that cankers
Our Peter's everlasting sleep!

There was a dreadful time, we keep

Still freshly on our memories painted,
 And you my friends, shall be acquainted
 By me, with all that history
 A g ievous record it will be

PART I³

O'er darkened Petrograd there rolled November's breath of autumn cold
 And Neva with her boisterous billow
 Splashed on her shapely bounding wall
 And tossed in restless rise and fall
 I like a sick man upon his pillow
 'Twas late and dark had fallen the rain
 Beat fiercely on the window pane
 A wind that howled and wailed was blowing
 'Twas then that young Yevgeny⁴ came Home from a party—I am going
 To call our hero by that name
 For it sounds pleasing and moreover My pen once liked it—why discover
 The needless surname?—True it may Have been illustrious in past age, —Rung through tradition in the pages
 Of Karamzin and yet today
 That name is never recollected
 By Rumor and the World rejected
 Our hero—somewhere—served the State,
 He shunned the presence of the great
 Lived in Kolomna for the fate
 Cared not of forbears dead and rotten
 Or antique matters long forgotten
 So home Yevgeny came and tossed
 His cloak aside undressed and sinking
 Sleepless upon his bed was lost
 In sundry meditations—thinking
 Of what?—How poor he was how pun

And toil might some day hope to gain
An honored free assured position
How God it might be in addition
Would grant him better brains and pay
Such idle folk there were and they Lucky and lazy not too brightly
Gifted lived easily and lightly
And he—was only in his second Year at the desk

He further reckoned
That still the ugly weather held
That still the river swelled and swelled
That almost now from Neva's eddy
The bridges had been moved already That from Parasha he must be Parted for some two days or three
And all that night he lay so dreaming
And wishing sadly that the gale
Would bate its melancholy screaming
And that the rain would not assail
The glass so fiercely But sleep closes
His eyes at last and he reposes

But see the mists of that rough night
Thin out and the pale day grows bright
That dreadful day!—For Neva leaping
Seaward all night against the blast
Was beaten in the strife at last
Against the frantic tempest sweeping
And on her banks at break of day
The people swarmed and crowded curious
And reveled in the towering spray
That spattered where the waves were furious
But the wind driving from the bay
Dammed Neva back and she receding
Came up in wrath and riot speeding
And soon the islands flooded lay

Madder the weather grew and ever
Higher upswelled the roaring river
And bubbled like a kettle, and whirled
And like a maddened beast was hurled
Swift on the city All things routed
Fled from its path and all about it
A sudden space was cleared the flow
Dashed in the cellars down below
Canals up to their gratings spouted
Behold Petropol floating lie
Like Triton in the deep waist high!

A siegel the wicked waves attacking
Climb thief like through the windows backing,
The boats stern foremost smite the glass
Trays with their soaking wrappage pass
And timbers roofs and huts all shattered
The wares of thrifty traders scattered
And the pale beggar's chattels small
Bridges swept off beneath the squall
Coffins from sodden graveyards- all Swim in the streets!

And contemplating
God's wrath the folk their doom are waiting
All will be lost ah where shall they Find food and shelter for today?

The glorious Emperor, now departed
In that grim year was sovereign
Of Russia still He came sick hearted
Out on his balcony and in pain
He said No czar tis su e is master
Over God's elements! In thought
He sat and gazed on the disaster
Sad-eyed and on the evil wrought
For now the squares with lakes were studded
Their torrents broad the streets had flooded
And now forlorn and islanded

The palace seemed The Emperor said
One word—and see, along the highways
His generals⁵ hurrying through the byways!
From city's end to end they sped
Through storm and peril bent on saving
The people, now in panic raving
And drowning in their houses there

New-built, high up in Peter's Square
A corner mansion then ascended
And where its lofty person ended
Two sentry lions stood at guard
Like living things and kept their ward
With paw uplifted Here, bare headed,
Pale rigid arms across his breast
Upon the creature's marble crest
Sat poor Yevgeny Put he dreaded
Nought for himself he did not hear
The hungry rollers rising near
And on his very footsoles plashing
Feel on his face the rainstorm lashing
Or how the riotous moaning blast
Had snatcht his hat His eyes were fast
Fixt on one spot in desperation
Where from the deeps in agitation
The wicked waves like mountains rose,
Where the storm howled and round were driven Fragments of wreck There God in Heaven!
Hard by the bay should stand and close
Alas too close to the wild water
A paintless fence a willow tree,
And there a frail old house should be Where dwelt a widow with a daughter
Parasha—and his dream was she¹
His dream—or was it but a vision
All that he saw? Was life also An idle dream which in derision

Fate sends to mock us here below?

And he as though a man enchanted
And on the marble pinned and planted,
Cannot descend and round him lie
Only the waters There, on high
With Neva still beneath him churning,
Unshaken, on Yevgeny turning
His back and with an arm slung wide,
Behold the Image sit and ride
Upon his brazen horse astride!

PART II

But now with rack and ruin sated
And weary of her insolence
And uproar Neva still elated
With her rebellious turbulence
Stole back and left her booty stranded
And unregarded So a bandit
Bursts with his horde upon a village
To smash and slay destroy and pillage
Whence yells and violence and alarms,
Gritting of teeth and grievous harms
And wailings then the evildoers
Rush home but dreading the pursuers
And sagging with the stolen load
They drop their plunder on the road
Meanwhile the water had abated
And pavements now uncovered lay
And our Yevgeny by dismay
And hope and longing agitated
More hearted to the river sped
But still it lay disquieted
And still the wild waves were seething
In pride of victory as though
A flame were moldering below
And heavily was Neva breathing

Like to a horse besprent with foam
Who gallops from the battle home
Yevgeny watches and descrying
By happy chance a boat goes flying
To hail the ferryman and he Unhired and idle willingly
Convoys him for a threepence plying
Through that intimidating sea
The old tried oarsman long contended
With the wild waves hour by hour
Sunk in the trough the skiff descended
Mid rollers ready to devour
Rash crew and all—at last contriving
To make the farther shore

Arriving

Yevgeny—evil is his lot!—
Runs to the old familiar spot
Down the old street—and knows it not
All to his horror is demolished
Leveled or ruined or abolished
Houses are twisted all awry
And some are altogether shattered
Some shifted by the seas and scattered
Are bodies flung as bodies lie
On battlefields Unthinkingly
Half fainting and excruciated
Yevgeny rushes on awaited
By destiny with unrevealed
Tiding as in a letter sealed
He scours the suburb and discerning
The bay he knows the house is near
And then stops short ah what is here?
Retreating and again returning
He looks—advances—looks again
Tis there they dwelt the marks are plain
There is the willow Surely yonder

The gate was standing, in the past
Now, washt away! No house!—O'ercast
With care behold Yevgeny wander
For ever round and round the place
And talk aloud and strike his face
With his bare hand A moment after He breaks into a roar of laughter

The vapors of the night came down
Upon the terror stricken town
But all the people long debated
The doings of the day and waited
And could not sleep The morning light
From pale and weary clouds gleamed bright
On the sullen capital no traces Now of the woes of yesternight!
With royal purple it effaces
The mischief all things are proceeding
In form and order as of old
The people are already treading
Impassive in their fashion cold
Through the cleared thoroughfares unheeding
And now official folk forsake
Their last night's refuge as they make Their way to duty Greatly daring
The huckster now takes heart, unbaring
His cellar late the prey and sack
Of Neva—hoping to get back
His heavy loss and wasted labor
Out of the pockets of his neighbor
The drifted boats from each courtyard
Are carried

To a certain bard
A count a favorite of heaven
To one Khvostov the theme was given To chant in his immortal song
How Neva's shores had suffered wrong
But my Yevgeny poor sick fellow!—

Alas the tumult in his brain
Had left him powerless to sustain
Those shocks of terror For the bellow
Of riotous winds and Neva near Resounded always in his ear
A host of hideous thoughts attacked him
A kind of nightmare rent and racked him,
And on he wandered silently
And as the week the month went by Never came home His habitation
As time ran out the landlord took
And leased the now deserted nook
For a poor poet's occupation

Nor ever came Yevgeny home
For his belongings he would roam
A stranger to the world his ration
A morsel tendered in compassion
Out of a window he would tramp
All day and on the quay would camp
To sleep his garments old and fraying
Were all in tatters and decaying
And the malicious boys would pelt
The man with stones and oft he felt
The cabman's whiplash on him flicking
For he had lost the skill of picking
His footsteps -deafened it may be
By fears that clamored inwardly
So dragging out his days ill fated
He seemed like something miscreated
No beast nor yet of human birth
Neither a denizen of earth
Nor phantom of the dead

Belated

One night on Neva wharf he slept
Now summer days toward autumn crept
A wet and stormy wind was blowing
And Neva's sullen waters flowing

Plashed on the wharf and muttered there
Complaining—beat the slippery stair
As suitors beat in supplication
Unheeded at a judge's door
In gloom and rain amid the roar
Of winds—a sound of desolation
With cries of watchmen interchanged
Afar, who through the darkness ranged—
Our poor Yevgeny woke and daunted,
By well remembered terrors haunted,
He started sharply rose in haste
And forth upon his wanderings paced —And halted on a sudden, staring
About him silently and wearing
A look of wild alarm and awe
Where had he come? for now he saw
The pillars of that lofty dwelling
Where on the perron sentineling,
Two lion figures stand at guard
Like living things keep watch and ward
With lifted paw Upright and glooming
Above the stony barrier looming
The image, with an arm flung wide,
Sat on his brazen horse astride⁶

And now Yevgeny with a shiver
Of terror, felt his reason clear
He knew the place for it was here
The flood had gamboled, here the river
Had surged here rioting in their wrath,
The wicked waves had swept a path
And with their tumult had surrounded Yevgeny lions square—and Him
Who moveless and aloft and dim
Our city by the sea had founded
Whose will was Fate Appalling there
He sat begirt with mist and air
What thoughts engrave His brow! what hidden

Power and authority He claims!
What fire in yonder charger flames!
Proud charger whither art thou ridden
Where leapest thou? and where on whom,
Wilt plant thy hoof?—Ah lord of doom
And potentate twas thus appearing Above the void and in thy hold
A curb of iron thou sat st of old
O'er Russia on her haunches rearing!

About the Image at its base
Poor mad Yevgeny circled straining
His wild gaze upward at the face
That once o'er half the world was reigning
His eye was dimmed cramped was his breast,
His brow on the cold grill was pressed
While through his heart a flame was creeping
And in his veins the blood was leaping
He halted sullenly beneath
The haughty Image clenched his teeth
And clasped his hands as though some devil
Possessed him some dark power of evil,
And shuddered whispering angrily
Ay architect with thy creation
Of marvels Ah beware of me!
And then in wild precipitation
He fled

For now he seemed to see
The awful Emperor quietly
With momentary anger burning
His visage to Yevgeny turning!
And rushing through the empty square
He hears behind him as it were Thunders that rattle in a chorus
A gallop ponderous sonorous
That shakes the pavement At full height
Illumined by the pale moonlight
With arm outflung behind him riding

See the bronze horseman comes bestriding
The charger clanging in his fligh
All night the madman flees, no matter
Where he may wander at his will Hard on his track with heavy clatter
There the bronze horseman gallops still

Thereafter whensoever straying
Across that square Yevgeny went
By chance his face was still betraying Disturbance and bewilderment
As though to ease a heart tormented
His hand upon it he would clap
In haste, put off his shabby cap,
And never raise his eyes demented
And seek some byway unfrequented

A little island lies in view
Along the shore and here, belated
Sometimes with nets a fisher-crew
Will moor and cook their long awaited
And meager supper Hither too
Some civil servant idly floating
Will come upon a Sunday boating
That isle is desolate and bare,
No blade of grass springs anywhere
Once the great flood had sported driving
The frail hut thither Long surviving
It floated on the water there
Like some black bush A vessel plying
Bore it last spring upon her deck
They found it empty all a wreck
And also cold and dead and lying Upon the threshold they had found
My crazy hero In the ground
His poor cold body there they hurried
And left it to God's mercy, buried

Francesco Algarotti a friend of Voltaire's left an account of a trip to Russia he made in 1739 Letters from Count Algarotti to Lord Hervey and the Marquis Scipio Maffei Containing the State of the Trade Marine Revenues and Forces of the Russian Empire translated from the Italian in two vols London 1769 In his letter dated Petersburg June 30 1739 occurs this passage I am at length going to give you some account of this new city of the great window lately opened in the north thro which Russia looks into Europe

EDITOR'S NOTE

² Mickiewicz in one of his best poems Oleszkiewicz has in most beautiful lines described the day preceding the Petersburg flood It is only a pity that his description is inaccurate There was no snow—the Neva was not covered with ice Our description is more correct although it has none of the brilliant colors of the Polish poet

AUTHOR'S NOTE

Oleszkiewicz painter mystic and friend of Mickiewicz in this poem appears at night in a boat on the Neva hears the storm rising and forebodes the flood that is coming on the morrow. He also under the palace walls apostrophizes the sleepless czar Alexander I not like Pushkin as a benevolent and sorrowing monarch but from the Polish standpoint as one in whose soul the evil principle has prevailed. God will shake the steps of the Assyrian throne.

Dedication

Not with a notion of delighting
Proud worldlings but to pleasure you
For friendship's sake would I were writing
A nobler page more fine and true
Worthy of him I am addressing Whose days are living poetry—
Affection's pledge indeed expressing
Your dreams your high simplicity
No matter—ah but look with favor
Upon the chapters in your hand
Half grave half gay and with a flavor
Of what is common what is grand
To this were trifling hours devoted,
Late nights yes and a facile art
Fruit of spoiled years or green and tart,
The mind's reflections coldly noted
The bitter insights of the heart

Chapter One

Makes haste to live and cannot wait to feel
K. Vyazemsky

My uncle's shown his good intentions
By falling, desperately ill
His worth is proved of all inventions
Where will you find one better still?
He's an example I'm averring
But God what boredom—there unstirring
By day by night thus to be bid
To sit beside an invalid!
Low cunning must assist devotion
To one who is but half alive
You puff his pillow and contrive
Amusement while you mix his potion
You sigh and think with furrowed brow—
Why can't the devil take you now?

'Tis thus the gay dog's thoughts are freighted,
As through the dust his horses fare
Who by the high gods will is fated
To be his relative's sole heir
You knew Ruslan and fair Ludmila
For this new hero prithee feel a Like fellowship as I regale
You readers with another tale
Onegin meet him born and nourished
Where old Neva's gray waters flow
Where you were born or as a beau
It may be in your glory flourished
I moved there also for a while But find the North is not my style

A man of rank his worthy father
Would always give three balls a year
He lived in debt and did not bother
To keep his hopeless ledgers clear
Fate guarded Eugene our young waster
While in due time Monsieur replaced her
At first Madame controlled the child
The charming lad was rather wild
Monsieur l'Abbe a Frenchman seedy
Thought sermons fashioned to annoy
He spared the rod to spoil the boy
And in a voice polite but reedy
Would chide him would forgive him soon,
And walk him in the afternoon

When Eugene reached the restless season
Of seething hopes and giddy play
And melancholy minus reason
Monsieur was sent upon his way
Now my Onegin keen as brandy
Went forth, in dress—a London dandy
His hair cut in the latest mode
He dined he danced he fenced he rode
In French he could converse politely,
As well as write and how he bowed!
In the mazurka 'twas allowed
No partner ever was so sprightly
What more is asked? The world is warm
In praise of so much wit and charm

Since but a random education
Is all they give us as a rule
With us to miss a reputation
For learning takes an utter fool
Onegin wisecracks aplenty
Pronounced most learned though not yet twenty,
And some harsh judges found forsooth
A very pedant in the youth
In talk he showed true talent swerving
About with great felicity
On weighty matters carefully
The silence of the sage preserving
And with the spark of a bon mot
He set the ladies eyes aglow

VI

Since Latin's held not worth attention
His knowledge of the tongue was slight
Of Juvenal he could make mention
Decipher epigraphs at sight
Quote Virgil, not a long selection
And always needing some correction,
And in a letter to a friend
Place a proud vale at the end
He had no itch to dig for glories
Deep in the dust that time has laid
He let the classic laurel fade
But knew the most amusing stories
That have come down the years to us
Since the dead days of Romulus

The art of verse that lofty pleasure,
He never mastered never knew
Trochaic from iambic measure,
In spite of all we tried to do
Theocritus and Homer bored him
If true delight you would afford him
You'd give him Adam Smith to read
A deep economist indeed
He talked about the wealth of nations
The state relied his friends were told
Upon its staples not on gold—
This subject filled his conversations
His father listened frowned and groaned,
And mortgaged all the land he owned

All Eugene knew is past relating
But for one thing he had a bent
And I am not exaggerating
His principal accomplishment
From early youth his dedication
Was to a single occupation
He knew one torment one delight
Through empty day and idle night
The science of the tender passion
That Ovid sang that brought him here,
And closed his turbulent career
In such a brief and tragic fashion—
Ovid who here so far from Rome
Found in the steppes an exile's home.

IX—X

He early played the fond deceiver
And feigned the pang of jealousy
Rejoiced the fair one but to grieve her,
Seemed sunk in gloom or bold and free
Would turn quite taciturn with languor
Then flash with pride and flame with anger
Show rapture or indifference
Or burn with sudden eloquence!
The letters that he wrote so neatly
So easily with passion seethed
One thing alone he loved he breathed
He could forget himself completely
His eyes, how tender quick and clear
Or shining with the summoned tear!

XI

He knew the ruses that would brighten
The eyes of the ingenuous young
He could pretend despair to frighten
Or use the adulator's tongue
He'd catch the moment of emotion
And out of an old fashioned notion
The strait laced innocent beguile
With skill and passion, touch and smile
He would implore the shy confession
Catch the first stirrings of the heart
Secure a tryst with tender art,
And at the following sweet session
Would tete à tete where no one heard
Instruct the fair without a word

'Twas early he learned how to flutter
The heart of the confirmed coquette!
What biting words the rogue would utter
Of those he wished her to forget!
None was so quick as he at trapping
A rival or to catch him napping
You men who lived in wedded bliss Remained his friends I grant you this
The married rakes no longer naughty
Would show him every friendliness
Suspicious age could do no less
Nor yet the cuckold stout and haughty
Whose satisfactions were through life
Himself, his dinner and his wife

XIII—XV

After an evening's dissipation
He will lie late and on his tray
Find notes piled high What? Invitations?
Three ladies mention a soiree
Here is a ball and there a party
His appetite for pleasure's hearty—
Where will my naughty lad repair?
For he is welcome everywhere
Meanwhile in morning costume gaily
Donning his wide brimmed Bolivar
He joins the throng on the boulevard
To promenade as all do daily
Until Breguet's unsleeping chime
Announces it is dinner time

XVI

At dusk a sleigh s the thing and calling
Make way! Make way! along they fly
Upon his heaver collar falling
Like silver dust the snowflakes lie
Talon s his goal no hesitating
His friend [Kaverin] must be waiting
He comes a cork pops up it goes,
The vintage of the comet flows
A bleeding roastbeef s on the table
And truffles, luxury of youth
French dishes for the gourmet s tooth
And Strasbourg pies imperishable
Here s every dainty that you please
Gold pines and live Limburger cheese

XVII

Glass after glass is drained in drenching
The hot fat cutlets you would say
They ve raised a thirst there is no quenching
But now it s time for the ballet
The theatre s wicked legislator
Who unto every fascinator
In turn his fickle flattery brings
And boasts the freedom of the wings
Onegin flies to taste the blisses
And breathe the free air of the stage
To praise the dancer now the rage
Or greet a luckless Phedre with hisses,
Or call the actress he preferred
Just for the sake of being heard

XVIII

Oh land of boundless fascination!
There bold Fonvizin freedom's friend,
Sped shafts of satire at the nation
Knyazhnin played ape there without end, Semyonova there wrought her magic With Ozerov's grave lines and tragic
Katenin at a later day
Revived the grandeur of Corneille
There Shakovskoy brought noisy laughter
With his sardonic comedies
Didot enjoyed his victories
Upon those very boards thereafter
Where in the shadow of the wings
My youth fled by remembrance clings

XIX

My goddesses! How shall I trace you?
I sadly call on each sweet name
Can others ever quite replace you?
And you can you remain the same?
Oh once again will you be singing
For me? Shall I yet see you winging
Your way in soulful flight and free
My fair Russian Terpsichore?
Or must I with dull glances follow
Strange faces mid the painted set
And having stared through my lorgnette
At the gay spectacle turned hollow,
Observe it with a yawn at last
And silently recall the past?

XX

The theatre's full the boxes glitter,
The stalls are seething the pit roars,
The gallery claps and stamps atwitter,
The curtain rustles as it soars
A fairy light about her playing
The magic of the bow obeying
A crowd of nymphs around her—lol
Istomina on lifted toe
One foot upon the floor is planted,
The other slowly circles thus
Then waited as by Eolus
She flies a thing of down enchanted,
Now serpentine she twists and wheels
And now she leaps and claps her heels

XXI

The house rocks with applause undaunted,
And treading toes between the chairs
Onegin presses with his vaunted
Aplomb he lifts his eye glass stares
Askance at fair unwonted faces
Remarks the jewels and the laces
And notes complexions, with a sneer
Briefly surveying every tier
He bows to sundry friends his mocking
Slow eyes come last to rest upon
The lighted stage and with a yawn
He sighs They're past the age—it's shocking!
I've haunted the ballet—what for?
Even Didelot becomes a bore

XXII

The imps and cupids quick as monkeys,
Upon the boards still flutter free
While in the lobby sleepy flunkeys
Are guarding fur-coats faithfully
Within you hear the feet still pounding
The coughs the shouts and hisses sounding
The noses blown, and without pause
Above it all, the wild applause
The carriage horses chilled with waiting Impatient twitch beneath the lamp
The coachmen round the bonfires tramp
Their masters wearily berating
But our Onegin's out of range
Of curses he's gone home to change

XXIII

Shall I depict less with a prudent
Than with a quite impartial pen
The cabinet where fashion's student
Is dressed undressed and dressed again?
What London haberdashers hallow
We buy with timber and with tallow
Tis here to please a lavish whim
With all a dandy's mind can limn
And all that Paris in her passion
For the most costly merchandise
So elegantly can devise
To tempt the sporting man of fashion,
Observe his closet well and gage
Thereby our eighteen year-old sage

XXIV

Here's bronze and china in profusion,
 And Turkish pipes of amber rare
 And for the senses sweet confusion,
 Perfumes in crystal cut with care
 Steel files and combs of various guises,
 And brushes thirty shapes and sizes
 That teeth and nails may both be served,
 Are here with scissors straight and curved.
 Rousseau (forgive me if I chatter)
 Could not conceive how pompous Grimm Dared clean his nails in front of him—
 The lofty madcap!—but no matter
 In this case it is not too strong
 To call that friend of freedom wrong

XXV

A man of sense I am conceding
 Can pay attention to his nails
 Why should one quarrel with good breeding?
 With most folk custom's rule prevails
 My Eugene was [Charlayev] second
 With every jealous word he reckoned
 No rung would suit him but the top—
 In dress a pedant and a fop
 To prink and preen he'd ask no urging
 But spend three hours before the glass
 Till from his dressing room he'd pass
 Like Venus very self emerging
 When as a man at masquerade
 The frivolous great goddess played

XXVI

Now having given due attention
 To a toilette you must admire
 The learned world would have me mention
 Each detail of our friend's attire
 One takes a risk in such discussion
 Because there are no words in Russian
 For trousers dress-coat and for vest
 But then it puts me to the test
 For as it is my style is peppered
 With foreign words their frequency
 I trust that you will pardon me
 With French it's spotted like a leopard—
 Although I've glanced at in times gone,
 The Academic lexicon

XXVII

But never mind let's rather hurry
 Off to the ball as is required
 Whither Onegin in a flurry
 Is dashing in the cab he hired
 Along dark streets wrapped deep in slumber
 Gay carriages a goodly number
 Shed rainbow lights across the snow
 From their twin lanterns as they go
 With lampions bright on sills and ledge.
 The splendid mansion shines and gleams
 And silhouetted by the beams
 Across the pane a shadow edges
 The profile that a move will start
 Of lovely lady, modish air

XXVIII

Straight past the porter, like an arrow
Our hero took the marble stair
But then he paused and with his narrow
White hand he swiftly smoothed his hair,
And entered Here the throng is trooping
The orchestra's already drooping
A gay mazurka holds the crowd
The press is thick the hubbub loud
The Horse Guard's spurs clank as he dances
And hand meets hand and hearts beat high,
The ladies' little feet fly by Pursued in flight by flaming glances
While wildly all the fiddles sing
To drown the jealous whispering

XXIX

When I knew ardor and elation
On balls I also used to dote
There one can make a declaration
And cleverly convey a note
Husbands esteemed to you I tender—
Your honor's most astute defender—
My services in time of need
My earnest counsels prithee heed
And guard your daughters more severely,
You mothers as your own once did
Or else—or else— else God forbid!
Hold your lorgnette up watch them nearly These warnings in your ears are dinned
Because it's long since I have sinned

XXX

Obeying folly's least suggestion
 How much of life I spent in vain
 And yet were morals not in question
 I'd live through every ball again
 I love fierce youth my private passion
 Is the shrewd elegance of fashion
 The crowd whose sparkle nothing dims,
 The little feet and lovely limbs
 Search Russia through you'll scarce discover
 Three pairs of truly pretty feet
 Ah once how fast my heart would beat
 When two feet tripped toward their lover!
 I'm sad and cold yet they can start
 In dreams a tumult in my heart

XXXI

When will you love remembrance of them?
 Where go you madman to forget?
 Ah little feet how I did love them!
 Now on what flowers are they set?
 In Orient luxury once cherished
 The trace you left has long since perished
 From Northern snows you loved to tread
 Upon voluptuous rugs instead
 It was for you that I neglected
 The call of fame for you forgot
 My country and an evil's lot—
 All thoughts but those of you rejected
 Brief as your footprints on the grass
 The happiness of youth must pass

XXXII

Diana's breast, the face of Flora
Are charming, friends, but I would put Them both aside and only for a Glimpse of Terpsichore's sweet foot
Prophetic of a priceless pleasure,
A clue to joys beyond all measure,
Its classic grace draws in its wake
Desires that are too keen to slake
Where'er it goes I am its lover
When on the grass in Spring it's pressed
Or by the fireplace set at rest
At table neath the damask cover
Crossing the ballroom's polished floor
Or climbing down the rocky shore

XXXIII

Well I remember waves in riot
Before a storm I wanted, too,
Thus to rush forth then lapse in quiet
There at her feet as they would do
The billows covered them with kisses
My lips were envious of their blisses!
No when with youth and love on fire
I did not ache with such desire
To brush the shy lips of a maiden
Or touch to flame a rosy cheek
Or with such urgent ardor seek To kiss the breast with languor laden
No passion never wrought for me
The same consuming agony

XXXIV

With sighs I think bemused adorer
Aghast at time's swift slipping sands
How once I held her surrup for her
And caught that foot in these two hands
Again imagination's kindled
The heart that thought its fires had dwindled Flames up the embers glow again
With sudden passion sudden pain
But in their praises why be stringing
Anew the garrulous fond lyre?
The haughty creatures may inspire
Our songs but are not worth the singing
Their looks enchant their words are sweet
And quite as faithless as their feet

XXXV

And what of my Onegin? Drowsing
He's driven from the ball to bed
The drum is heard the city's rousing
For Petersburg's no sleepyhead
The peddler prods the merchant dresses,
While into town the milkmaid presses
Bearing her jar o'er crealing snows
And to his stand the cabby goes
The cheerful morning sounds awaken
The shutters open chimneys spout
The baker's wicket opens out
A loaf is proffered coins are taken
A white cap shows all in a trice
The baker's German and precise

XXXVI

The ball's wild gaiety was wearing
So turning morning into night,
To darkness kind abode repairing
Now sleeps the scion of delight
By afternoon he will be waking
He'll then resume till day is breaking
The merry and monotonous round,
And then once more till noon sleep sound
But was true joy to Eugene granted
Then in the flower of his youth?
Was pleasure happiness in sooth
Mid all the conquests that he vunted?
When in the banquet hall he beamed
Was he the carefree soul he seemed?

XXXVII

No soon the world began to bore him,
The senses soon grew blunt and dull
In vain the belles might clamor for him
He found the fairest faces null
Seduction ceased to be amusing
And friendship's claims he was refusing Because he could make no bon mot
Could not wash down with Veuve Clicquot
The beefsteak and the Strasbourg patty
When his poor head began to ache
And though he was an ardent rake
An exquisite both bold and natty,
The time came when he quite abhorred
Even the pistol and the sword

XXXVIII

But there's no need that I dissemble
His illness—name it how you choose,
The English spleen it may resemble
Twas in a word the Russian blues
He spared us true, one piece of folly,
Although he grew more melancholy
Was bored with everything he tried
He did stop short of suicide
Soft glance, nor welcome sweetly caroled,
Nor cards nor gossip chased his gloom
He'd stroll into the drawing room
Surly and languid as Childe Harold
A wanton sigh was not worth mention
Nothing attracted his attention

XXXIX—XLII

He first abandoned you capricious
Great ladies of whom he'd been fond Indeed, today there is a vicious
Ennui pervading the haut monde
Perhaps some lady may find matter
In Say and Bentham for her chatter,
But the discussions I have heard
Though innocent, are quite absurd
If you have any mind to flirt you
Are turned by one cool glance to ice
So pious are they so precise,
And so inflexible their virtue
They are so clever, so serene,
The sight of them produces spleen

XLIII

You also youthful belles belated
O'er Petersburg's dark pavements borne
In dashing cabs you too were fated
To learn my Eugene's air of scorn
To stormy gaiety a traitor
Onegin now decides he'll cater
To an ambitious author's whims
His door he locks his lamp he trims
He yawns for serious labor tries him
His page is empty as can be,
The pen makes mock of such as he
And so the bumptious guild denies him,
And I can't say the clique is wrong
To which, God help me, I belong

XLIV

At length our hollow hearted hero
A worthy course of action finds
The sum of all his thoughts is zero
And so he'll rifle keener minds
A shelf of books he's been perusing
But who does that is only choosing
Between a rascal and a bore
He's read and read and pray what for?
Old fogies all chained to tradition
The newcomers but ape the old
Behind the curtain's funeral fold
He soon consigns them to perdition
He's done with women and it looks
As though he's surely done with books

The beau monde & burdensome conventions
I too had dropped and found him then—
As bored as I with vain inventions—
The most congenial of men
His way of dreaming willy nilly,
His sharp intelligence and chilly
I liked and his peculiar pose
I was embittered he morose
We both had played with passion early
We both had wearied of the game
The hearts of both now spurned the flame
And had grown ashen cold and surly
And both though young could but await Men's malice and the stroke of Fate

XLVI

One who has lived and thought grows scornful,
Disdain sits silent in his eye
One who has felt is often mournful Disturbed by ghosts of days gone by
He can no longer be enchanted
No respite to his heart is granted—
Remembering the past perforce
He is the victim of remorse
All this lends charm to conversation
And though the talk of my young friend
At first disturbed me in the end
I listened not without elation
To his sharp judgments sullen wit
And epigrams that scored a hit.

XLVII

Of quiet summer nights, how often
When with diaphaneous pale light
O'er the Neva the sky would soften
And the smooth waters mirror bright,
Would fail to show Diana gleaming
We yielded to delicious dreaming
Recalling in the soft sweet air
Many a distant love affair—
The pleasures relished, triumphs thwarted
Like prisoners released in sleep
To roam the forests green and deep,
We were in reverie transported,
And carried to that region where All life before us still lay fair

XLVIII

Onegin leaned above the river
Upon the granite parapet
As did the bard—yet not aquiver
With ecstasy but with regret
Here one heard naught but echoes dying
From distant streets where cabs were flying,
And sentinel to sentinel
Sounding the cry that all was well
Alone a lazy boatman lifted
His oars above the drowsy stream
A horn rang out, as in a dream
A song across the waters drifted
But Tasso's murmured octaves are B, night in dalliance, sweeter far

XLIX

Oh waters of the Adriatic!
Oh Brenta! I shall yet rejoice
When once again inspired ecstatic,
I hear the magic of your voice
Sacred to scions of Apollo!
No bard was keen as I to follow
The strains of Albion's proud lyre
Extolling you in tones of fire!
Once free and night will find me gloating
Upon a fair Venetian face
Within the gondola's embrace
In golden languor vaguely floating,
And she will learn my knowledge of The tongue of Petrarch and o' love

'Tis time to loose me from my tether
I call on freedom—naught avails
I pace the beach, await good weather
And beckon o the passing sails
When wrapped in storm shall I be battling
The billows while the shrouds are rattling
And roam the sea's expanse unpent,
Quit of the shore's dull element?
'Tis time to seek the southern surges
Beneath my Afric's sunny sky
And there at home for Russia sigh
Lamenting in new songs and dirges
The land that knew my love my pain
Where long my buried heart has lain

LI

The pair of us had planned to wander
On foreign scenes to feast our eyes
But I am here and he is yonder
Fate had arranged it otherwise
Upon the death of his dear father
The creditors began to gather
And Eugene when he saw these sirs—
Each man must do as he prefers—
Because he hated litigation
Surrendered his inheritance
He thought it no great loss—perchance
He had some other expectation?
Had Eugene from a little bird
Of his old uncle's illness heard?

LII

Indeed he soon received a letter
Which told him that his uncle lay
Too ill for hopes of getting better,
And had his last farewells to say
Eugene perused the sad epistle
Thoughts of the future made him whistle
He caught the post with eager haste
But soon was yawning while he raced
He knew the task would sorely try him
For (as I've said) there he must sit
And fawn and play the hypocrite
But when he comes they notify him
His uncle's in his coffin laid
His debt to nature has been paid

LIII

The servants gave him all assistance,
The house hummed like a hive of bees
With friends and foes come from a distance
Just to enjoy the obsequies
The dead man buried they were able To do full justice to the table
And feeling they had done their best,
Gravely departed priest and guest
Here was Onegin then possessing His stables forests streams and land
He who could never understand
An ordered way of life confessing
His early years were all a waste
And this routine was to his taste.

LIV

Two days he found it quite diverting
The meadows solitary look
The shady thickets cool begirting
The purling of a gentle brook
The third day interest abated
And he was not the least elated
By grove and stream and field and steep—
They only sent him off to sleep
For though the country boasts no palace,
No card game, poetry or ball
Its pleasures like the city's pall
He noted with accustomed malice
A shadow or a wife pursues
As he was followed by the blues

LV

I like a life of country quiet,
There may the lyre sound clear and free,
There fancies bloom and dreams run riot—
It suits my Muse as it suits me
At peace it is my artless pleasure
To wander by the lake at leisure,
In solitude without a flaw
And far niente is my law
Each morning I awake proposing
Another day without an aim
I have no care for slighty fame
I hardly read I'm often dozing
Was it no thus I long since spent
My youth in slothful sweet content?

LVI

To love and idleness devoted
To flowery field and village sport,
With pleasure I have often noted
That I am not Onegin's sort
Let no sly reader be so daring—
Onegin's traits with mine comparing—
And no calumnious friend so pert
As some time later to assert
That here for all the world to know it,
I've drawn a likeness perfectly
A portrait of none else but me
Like Byron pride's consummate poet
As though there were a tacit ban
On writing of another man

LVII

Poets it is my observation,
 Indulge in lovers' dreams with ease
 I too made it my occupation
 To play with tender reveries
 First memory would trace the features
 In secret of dear distant creatures
 And the rare magic of the Muse
 The breath of life would then infuse
 The mountain maid untamed inspiring
 The prisoned girls of the Salgir
 'Twas thus I sang them—both were dear
 Now my companions are inquiring
 In all the jealous crowd what she Commands your tender minstrelsy?

LVIII

Whose glances quickening emotion
 Caressingly repaid your song?
 To whom did your confessed devotion
 To whom your pensive verse belong?
 To no one friends you must believe me
 I loved and nothing could relieve me
 That man alone knows blessedness
 Who is inspired in his distress
 For thus he brings his passion's fuel
 To poetry's exalted flame
 And when consoled by art—and fame
 Like Petrarch he finds love less cruel
 But feeling the blind archer's sting
 I was a dolt and could not sing

LIX

The Muse has come, and love departed,
The darkened mind is clear again
And as of old I mix free hearted,
Feeling and thought with music's strain.
I write, and longing is diminished
Beside the stanza all unfinished
No more the casual pen is led
To sketch a woman's legs or head
Cold ashes hide no smoldering ember,
I have no tears in spite of grief
The storms which shook it like a leaf
Soon soon my soul will not remember
Then what a poem I'll contrive
In cantos numbering twenty five!

LX

The plan I had no pains to settle
The hero's named the work's begun,
My novel finds me in good fettle
And I've completed Chapter One
I've scanned the pages most severely,
The errors are a trifle merely
And those I do not greatly rue
I'll give the censorship its due
Let critics wreak their indignation Upon the finished product then
Neva oh offspring of my pen
Shall greet you Go my dear creation
Be sentenced by a crooked jury
And earn me fame and sound and fury

Chapter Two

O rus!

Horace

O Rus!

The village where Onegin's leisure
 But left him bored to a degree
 Would ravish one who prized the treasure
 Of innocent felicity
 The mansion by a hill well hidden
 Where winds and tempests were forbidden
 And near a stream stood calm and proud
 Surveying fallow land and plowed
 Beyond the plain with hamlets dotted
 And chequered brown and gold and green
 A halcyon bucolic scene
 With roaming flocks was lightly spotted While in the garden's lavish shade
 The contemplative dryads played

The mansion from its firm foundation
 Up to its roof was past all praise Expressing the discrimination
 The noble taste of bygone days
 The stove with colored tiles appealing
 If out of date the lofty ceiling
 Ancestral portraits in the gloom
 And damask of the drawing room—
 All this is now outworn and faded
 The glory's gone I know not why
 But the sad ruin brought no sigh
 From Eugene he was far too jaded—
 In time worn halls and those that just Had been refurbished yawn he must.

The room where the old man berated
His housekeeper for forty years
Killed flies and snugly rusticated,
Is now our hero's it appears
The furnishings are plain and stable
The floor is oak two chests a table,
A down stuffed couch are all I think,
And nowhere is a spot of ink
Onegin searched the cupboards finding Liqueurs a ledger, applejack,
And tucked away an almanac
For 1808 without a binding
The old man had no time to look Into a more exacting book

Alone among his new possessions
At first Eugene began to dream
Of making certain grand concessions
And setting up a new regime
For the corvée he substituted
Light quit rent, and the slave, well suited
Because there was not much to pay
Blessed the new master every day
Not so his calculating neighbor
Who thought our Eugene was a gull
Another neighbor tapped his skull
Why thus dispense with lawful labor?
The youth was cailed on every hand
A faddist and a firebrand

The neighbors promptly called and twaddled
Of this and that, to his distress
Hence oft he had his stallion saddled
At the back porch in readiness
That he, when wheels were within hearing
Might dash away as they were nearing
The gentry all cried out a scorn
This insult was not to be borne
Onegin is a boor, a mason
He leaves the ladies hands unkissed
Drinks wine in tumblers it was hissed
He never puts a civil face on Says yes and no but never sir
In this opinion all concur

Another landowner come newly
To his estate about this time
Was also picked to pieces duly
For gossip is not held a crime
Vladimir Lensky handsome youthful A Kantian unspoiled and truthful
Whose soul was shaped in Gottingen
And who could wield the poet's pen
From misty Germany Vladimir
Had brought the fruits of learning's tree
An ardent faith in liberty
The spirit of an oddish dreamer
Rapt eloquence in speech and song
And curls as black as they were long

Unspoiled by the vain show and fleeting
Of this cold world his soul would bless
With equal warmth a comrade's greeting
And a shy maiden's pure caress
His heart the nest of fond illusion
In worldly dazzle and confusion
The hopeful youth was quick to find
Much to enchant his virgin mind
His doubts were never past the curing
In reverie they would dissolve
Life was a riddle he would solve
He found it puzzling but alluring
He racked his brains and still believed
That miracles could be achieved

A kindred soul he held was burning
To be united to his own
And day by day in pensive yearning
It waited on for him alone
He held that loyal friends and steady
To save his honor stood quite ready
To suffer prison and would fly
At once the slanderer to defy
He held that some by Fate were chosen

IX

He early knew the agitation
 Of love for virtue sore regret,
 The stir of noble indignation
 Hope of a name none might forget
 He was none of your poetasters,
 Goethe and Schiller were his masters,
 Beneath their sky he plucked his lyre
 His spirit knew their lyric fire
 And fortune's darling in his rhyming
 He paid the Muses honor due
 His sentiments were fine and true
 His music therewith sweetly chiming
 His were the dreams that move the heart
 And his the charm of simple art

The theme from which he ne'er departed
 Was love he sang it late and soon,
 Serene as maidens simple hearted
 As infant slumbers as the moon
 In the unruffled heavens shining
 He sang of parting and repining
 The mystic, wistful hours of night
 Of distance promising delight
 He sang the rose, romantic flower
 And lands remote where on the breast
 Of silence he had lain at rest
 And let his tears unheeded shower
 He sang life's bloom and early blight
 His nineteenth year was scarce in sight

XI

Eugene alone was framed to measure
 The gifts the newcomer possessed
 The local gentry's round of pleasure
 Could scarce inspire young Lensky's zest
 He fled their noisy conversation
 And found their prudent talk vexation
 All in and in their crops and wine
 Here not a wit was found to shine
 (Not with fine words are parsnips buttered)
 No syllable of sentiment
 No grace no flash of merriment
 Lay hid in all the prose they uttered —
 No savoir vivre no hint of verse
 And when their wives talked, it was worse

XII

Lensky was thought an eligible
A wealthy youth and handsome too
There was something intelligible
About this common rustic view
 The talk would turn with strange persistence
 Upon the bachelor's sad existence
 All wish to see their daughters wed
 To this half Russian German bred
 The samovar that blest invention
 Is brought and Dunya pours his tea,
 And next the girl's guitar we see
 They whisper Dunya pay attention!
 And Dunya squeaks (would she were dumb!)
Into my golden chamber come!

XIII

Of course young Lensky felt no yearning
For marriage bond or marriage bell
Instead of that our friend was burning
To know Onegin really well
They met except that both were human
They were unlike as any two men
As rock and wave or ice and flame
Or prose and verse—in naught the same
So different first they bored each other
Then liking grew they met each day
On horseback such close friends were they They clung as brother clings to brother
Thus people frankly I confess Grow fond—out of sheer idleness

XIV

Such faithful friendship as my hero's
Is in these parlous days unknown
We think all other people zeros
And integers ourselves alone
We're all Napoleons we're certain—
On sentiment we draw the curtain
Two-legged millions are our tools
Emotion is for clowns and fools
Eugene more tolerant than many Yet, as a rule despised mankind
Exceptions may be hard to find
But there's no rule that has not any
He scorned most men (not everyone)
Esteemed emotion feeling none

XV

He listened to young Lensky, smiling
The poet's ardent speech the mind
So immature and so beguiling
The fiery glance, he could but find
A novelty framed to divert him
He thought I must not disconcert him
By mocking glance or chilly word,
Such bliss is transient if absurd
Since time without my interference
Will cure the lad, for good or ill,
Let him believe in wonders still
And credit the world's fair appearance,
Youth's fever is its own excuse
For ravings that it may induce

XVI

In deep reflection, hot discussion,
Their meetings passed in turn they spoke
Of foreign history and Russian
Of prejudice's ancient yoke
Of good and evil and of science
Of destiny and its defiance
Of that dread mystery the grave
Their judgment both men freely gave
The poet in his exaltation
Would cite a verse he had by heart,
Some fragment of his Northern art,
And clinch the point with a quotation.
Though Eugene lent a willing ear,
He found the matter not too clear

The passions though concerned more often
Our talkative young eremites
Onegin's mocking voice would soften
As he depicted their delights
He sighed no longer subject to them
Most blessed is he who never knew them
And blessed the man who rids him of Their pangs! and he, remote from love,
Who never longed and never hated,
Who yawning with his friends and wife,
In gossip finds the spice of life
All jealous thoughts evaporated—
The happy man who took no chance
At cards with his inheritance!

When we seek refuge growing colder
Beneath the prudent flag of peace
When passion's fires no longer smolder,
And all their wayward stirrings cease
And when we find our old devotion
No more a reason for emotion
And its late sequel as absurd
We yet attend upon the word
That trembles with another's passion
The heart recalls its ancient scars
As one who fought forgotten wars
Reviews the past in wistful fashion
A veteran who never fails
To hang upon the young bloods' tales.

XIX

But fiery youth cannot dissemble
Its love or anger, grief or joy
It all pours forth from lips that tremble
With the avowals of a boy
Wearing a look of self possession
Onegin heard the sweet confession
His friend unburdened himself of—
He was a veteran in love
Freely the poet spoke and truly
His heart was pure, his conscience clear,
Onegin was allowed to hear
In full the tender story duly
A tale of sentiment not new These many years to me or you

XX

He loved as people love no longer
Whose hearts the years at length anneal
His was the love of poets stronger
Than other men are doomed to feel
He knew one constant inspiration
And not long years of separation
Nor distance changed his earnest mood
Or brought his longing quietude
Not hours when he fulfilled the duties
That poets owe unto the Muse
Nor studies such as pedants choose
Nor noisy games nor foreign beauties
Could alter Lensky's virgin soul
Where love burned like a living coal

When scarce a lad his heart was captured—
 A heart that had not felt a pang—
 By little Olga and enraptured
 He watched her as she played and sang
 And one would find the children roaming
 Together in the forest gloaming
 The fathers indeed all could see
 Their marriage was a certainty
Watched fondly, in seclusion growing
The charming and ingenuous maid
Bloomed like a flower in the shade
A lily of the valley blowing
In the thick grass where none can see,
Unknown to butterfly and bee

The poet's earliest elation
 Young Olga was the first to stir
 { She was his lyre's first inspiration
His virgin lyric was of her
 But now adieu oh, golden playtime!
 He loved the dark and shunned the daytime,
 And craved the forest's shady boon
 The silent stars the brooding moon—
 The moon the lampion of heaven
 To which we vowed our walks apart
 Whose secret solace on the heart
Would drop so tenderly at even Though now a light of no repute
 The street lamps pallid substitute

XXIII

As grateful as a kiss as simple
 As Lensky's life that knew no guile,
 Was gentle Olga—in her dimple
One saw the cheerful morning smile
Her sky blue eyes, her cheeks like roses,
Her flaxen hair, her graceful poses,
Her voice, were such as they portray
In all the novels of the day
 There was a time when the portrayal
 Was one that I found exquisite,
 But now I am fed up with it
 Dear reader pardon the betrayal,
 And I shall speak if you allow,
 About her older sister now

Though it suggests a peasant's hovel,
 Tatyana was her sister's name
 For the first time in any novel
 It humbly asks romantic fame
 Why not? You can have no objection,
 Though it is true your recollection
 Of syllables so musical
 Is bound up with the servants' hall
 With olden days and doddering nurses
 We can't please the fastidious
 For there's a lack of taste in us
 And in our names (and in our verses) Enlightenment makes such as we No finer, but just finicky

XXV

Tatyana was her name then—granted
She would not win you by her face
She lacked her sister's charm and wanted
Her rosy innocence and grace
No silent, wild and melancholy
And swift to flee from fun and folly
Shy as the doe who runs alone,
She seemed a stranger to her own
To fondle either parent never Was our morose Tatyana's way,
And as a child she'd romp and play
With other children scarcely ever
But by the window she would brood
The whole day through in solitude

XXVI

Since infancy her only pleasure
Was reverie she wreathed with dream
The placid course of rustic leisure
Her tender fingers sewed no seam
Nor was she found with head inclining
O'er her embroidery designing
In colored silks a pattern fit
To make a guest exclaim at it
The will to rule is seen thus early
The child while still at play prepares
For all her future social cares
And the polite world's hurly burly
And tells her doll with anxious thought
The maxims her mamma has taught

XXVII

But even then, and more s the pity
Tatyana had no doll at all
To gossip to about the city
And what the fashions were that fall
She was not one of those who glories
In mischief but horrific stories
Enchanted her while yet a child,
In winter when the nights were wild
And when the little girls collected
To tag each other or to roam
The woods Tatyana stayed at home,
By solitude nowise dejected
Her dreamy mood did not con ort
With laughter and with noisy sport

XXVIII

Tatyana might be found romancing
Upon her balcony alone
Just as the stars had left off dancing
When dawn's first ray had barely shown
When the cool messenger of morning
The wind would enter, gently warning
That day would soon be on the march,
And wake the birds in beech and larch
In winter when night's shade encloses
More lingeringly half the world
And in the misty moonlight furled,
The lazy Orient longer dozes
Roused at her wonted hour from rest
By candle light she rose and dressed

She found in a romantic story
All one might care to be or know
Living the chapters through she'd glory
In Richardson as in Rousseau
Her father saw no harm in reading (He was a decent chap conceding
He lived in quite another age)
But then he never read a page
He did not know that books could say things
To move you even while you slept
He thought the tomes his daughter kept
Beneath her pillow empty playthings
While on the other hand his wife
Held Richardson as dear as life

XXX

The lady's lasting admiration
The novelist had long since won
She had not read with fascination
Of Lovelace or of Grandison
But she had heard of them a dozen
Or more times from her Moscow cousin
Princess Aline when she was young
And when besides her heart was wrung
She was affianced but her mother
Had made the choice 'twas not her own
Her heart was filled with one alone,
For sad to say she loved another
A Grandison attached to cards
A beau a sergent of the Guards

XXXI

She followed as he did the fashion,
On elegance her mind was bent
But what availed her urgent passion?
They married her sans her consent
Her prudent husband to distract her Off to the country promptly packed her
Hoping her grief might thus abate
They settled down on his estate
Where she with God knows who for neighbors,
At first but wept and tore her hair
Spoke of divorce in her despair
Then plunged into domestic labors
Content since habit more or less,
Is surrogate for happiness

Kind habit soothed her sorrow sweetly
Until a great discovery
Consoled the lady quite completely
And grief changed to serenity
Between her hours of toil and leisure
The good wife took her husband's measure
And kept him underneath her rule
She did the overseeing cool
And resolute she shipped the peasant
For army service kept the books
She pickled mushrooms with her cooks
Slapped servant girls who were unpleasant
And steamed herself on Saturday—
Her spouse had not a word to say

Time was when she would be composing
An album verse with tender mien
She used a sing song voice and posing Praskovya she would call Pauline
She pinched her waist with tightened laces,
Affected a most nasal n
But years went rolling by and then
She lost her Frenchy airs and graces
The album and the corset vanished,
The tender verse Princess Pauline
She said Akulka for Celine
The nasal twang she also banished
And wore—her last defences down—
A mob-cap and a dressing gown

But her good husband loved her dearly
And trusted her with house and pelf
And never looked at her too nearly—
He wore a dressing gown himself
His life that knew no cares or labors
Rolled by in peace at times the neighbors
Some friendly family—at eve
Dropped in to gossip laugh or grieve
Together o'er some ample matter
And time would pass and there would be Young Olga coming to make tea
And put a finis to their chatter
They d sup then time for sleep drew nigh,
And so the guests would say good-bye

They loved the good old ways, and wallowed
At Carnival in savory cheer,
Eating the pancakes custom hallowed
They took communion twice a year
At Christmas, carols were their pleasure
They liked to tread a country measure
At Whitsun when he populace
Yawned through the long thanksgiving mass
They too were of their duties heedful
And on the lovage dropped a tear
Holding their pious habits dear
As men need air, they found kvass needful
Liked hearty guests who ate and drank,
And served each course to them by rank

And so they aged like all things mortal
And in due time the husband passed
Submissive through the grave's dark portal,
And wore the funeral wreath at last
A tender father a good master,
His passing came as a disaster
To friend and child and faithful wife,
He'd led a kind and simple life
He died a short hour before dinner
His epitaph is plain as he Graved on the monument you see
Dmitry Larin a poor sinner,
God's servant and a brigadier Come to eternal rest lies here

XXXVII

Come home again young Lensky duly Beheld the bed where all must lie
And by those ashes mourning truly,
Paid them the tribute of a sigh
Alas poor Yorick! he lamented
Once in those arms I lay contented,
And took his medal for a toy
When I was but a tiny boy!
He hoped that in good time I'd marry
His Olga I can hear him say
May I but live to see the day!
When we were young we did not tarry ~
And Lensky grieving honestly
Wrote, on the spot an elegy

XXXVIII

And there he also wrote another
Upon the patriarchal dust
And wept his father and his mother
Alas! by God's strange will we must Behold each generation flourish
And watch life's furrows briefly nourish
The perishable human crop
Which ripens fairly but to drop
And where one falls another surges
The race of men reels nothing save
Its reckless growth into the grave
The grandfathers it promptly urges
Our time will come when it is due,
Our grandchildren evict us too

XXXIX

Meanwhile, forget a I toil and trouble,
Take what is offered of delight
I know that life is but a bubble
My fondness for it is but slight
I am deceived by no illusion
But I salute hope's shy intrusion,
And sometimes in my heart I own
I would not leave the world unknown
I have no faith in its requiting
My labors yet perhaps this name
May wear the laurel crown of fame,
And yet win luster from my writing,
One line held in the memory,
May speak, like a fond friend of me

XL

My words may move some unborn lover
My stanza saved by jealous fate
It may be Lethe will not cover
Ah yes at some far distant date,
When I am gone and cannot know it
The cordial words "There was a poet"
Some dunce may yet pronounce as he Points out my portrait unctuously
Such are the bard's gratifications,
My thanks friend you will not refuse,
You venerator of the Muse
Who will recall my poor creations
You who will smooth in after days
With kindly hand the old man's bays

Chapter Three

Elle étoit fille elle étoit amoureuse

Malfilatre

'These poet ! What! another visit?
 Good bye Onegin I must go
 I shan't detain you but where is it
 You spend your time I'd like to know?
 These evenings? At the Larins Splendid But Lord before the evenings ended
 How is it that you do not fall Asleep from boredom? Not at all
 I cannot grasp it I'll be betting
 Here's what you find there (am I right?)
 The guests are greeted with delight
 You have a Russian family setting
 With tea and jam and endless tattle
 About the weather flax and cattle

I see no harm in that I'm grateful
 But it's a bore my friend that's clear
 Your fashionable world is hateful
 I find the plain home circle dear
 Where I can Ah another pretty Bucolic piece! Good Lord have pity!
 Well must you go now? Not so fast!
 When shall I meet the girl at last Whom you have found so interesting?
 I'd like to see with my own eyes
 Your Phyllis whom you idolize
 Pray introduce me You are jesting
 No "Gladly When? At once You'll see How very welcome you will be

Let's go
 The friends without delaying
 Dashed off arrived and heartily
 Were greeted with almost dismaying
 Old fashioned hospitality
 The table shone with wax they handed
 The saucers of preserve about
 Set huckleberry syrup out,
 Just as the social rites demanded

" " " " "
 " " " " "
 " " " " "
 " " " " "
 " " " " "
 " " " " "

They travel homeward quickly choosing or it is late, the shortest way,
 And reader, you are not refusing To overhear what they may say Well, now Onegin Yawning?" Merely A habit Lensky Oh but clearly
 'You're bored' "As ever But I mark
 That we are driving in the dark
 Be quick! Drive on! he bids the peasant
 "This silly landscapel Never mind
 Your Madam Larina's, I find
 A nice old woman plain but pleasant.
 That huckleberry syrup will I've a suspicion, make me ill

But tell me which one is Tatyana?
She sat beside the window She Is like the poet's maid Svetlana
Given to mournful reverie
You love the younger? Curious creature!
Why do you say so? Not a feature
Of Olga's looks alive to me
Her sister tempts the Muse not she Your Olga's face so round and blooming
Is like Van Dyck's Madonna Fiel
Or like up in the silly sky
That silly moon you see there looming
Vladimir made a dry response
And then sat silent for the nonce.

The neighbors pleasantly diverted
Asked what Onegin's visit meant
And one and all of them exerted
Themselves to find out his intent
Tatyana's match was all the rumor
They gossiped on in high good humor
If there was carping comment, too
And there were those who said they knew
The plans to have been consummated
But that the wedding was deferred
Because they lacked—hadn't one heard?—
The rings that the new mode dictated
Of Lensky's troth there was no chatter
His wedding was a settled matter

Tatyana listened with vexation
 To gossip but her heart would fill
 With a strange, secret exultation
 She conned the talk against her will
 A thought was born and grew, unbidden,
 Thus grows a seed the earth has hidden
 When springtime's sun shines warm above
 The time had come—she was in love
 Long since her dreams had set her yearning
 And coveting the fatal food
 Long since with sweet disquietude
 Had her shy wistful heart been burning,
 And freighted with a youthful gloom
 Her soul was waiting ah, for whom?

VIII

He came And her eyes opened Quaking
 She whispered to herself "Tis he!
 Alas in dreams, asleep or waking
From thoughts of him she is not free
All speaks of him, but to confound her
His magic presence hovers round her,
And so from idle talk she flies
And from the servants' anxious eyes
Plunged into sadness beyond measure,
When guests arrive she pays no heed
But wishes them away with speed
And curses their unwelcome leisure
She hates their having come at all,
Their endlessly protracted call

Now with what eager concentration
She reads the sweet romance and how Discovers a new fascination
In its seductive figments now!
The creatures fancy animated
Wer her to be a martyr fated
Malek Adhel and de Linar
St Preux the rival of Wolmar
And Grandison who leaves us sleeping
The matchless bore—on these she mused,
And all our tender dreamer fused
Into one image her heart leaping
As fancy in the lot would trace
Onegin's form Onegin's face

And so her quick imagination
Reveals herself in every scene
She is the novelist's creation
Julie Clarissa or Delphine

{ She wanders with imagined lovers
Through silent woods and she discover
Her dreams in every circumstance
Of some imported wild romance
Another's joy her heart possesses,
Another's grief is hers to rue
And in her mind a billet doux
To her dear hero she addresses
The hero we're intent upon
However was no Grandison

Tatyana listened with vexation
 To gossip, but her heart would fill
 With a strange secret exultation
 She conned the talk against her will
 A thought was born and grew unbidden
 Thus grows a seed the earth has hidden
 When springtime's sun shines warm above
 The time had come—she was in love
 Long since her dreams had set her yearning
 And coveting the fatal food
 Long since with sweet disquietude
 Had her shy wistful heart been burning,
 And freighted with a youthful gloom
 Her soul was waiting ah for whom?

VIII

He came And her eyes opened Quaking
 She whispered to herself 'Tis he!
 Alas in dreams, asleep or waking
From thoughts of him she is not free,
 All speaks of him, but to confound her
 His magic presence hovers round her
 And so from idle talk she flies
 And from the servants' anxious eyes
 Plunged into sadness beyond measure
 When guests arrive she pays no heed
 But wishes them away with speed
 And curses their unwelcome leisure
 She hates their having come at all,
 Their endlessly protracted call

All this is futile and you know it
My friends Perhaps, by heaven's decree,
I shall yet cease to be a poet
Another demon seizing me
I shall defy the dread Apollo
Content in my old age to follow
The fashion of an older day
Write prose and take the humbler way
I'll tell no ghostly tales or gory
Or paint the villain's agony
A simple Russian family
Will be the subject of my story
And love's delicious dream and too
The customs that our fathers knew

XIV

The father's simple words repeating
Or the old uncle's I shall tell
Next of the children's breathless meeting
Where lindens hide the lovers well
Of jealous pangs and separation
And tears of reconciliation
After they've quarreled once again
I'll bring them to the altar then
I shall recall the tongue of longing
The languors of a distant day
When at my mistress' feet I lay
And to my lips the words came thronging
The lover's language the sweet vow
Of which I've lost the habit now

XV

Tatyana dear Tatyana! Weeping,
I share the scalding tears you drop
Your fate is put into the keeping
Of a most tyrannous young fop
And you my dear are doomed to perish,
But first what dark delight you cherish,
What dazzling hopes awhile are yours
As you discover life's allures,
And drink desire's sweet poisoned potion
You dwell in dreams, and you persist
In fancying a happy tryst —
In every nook, with strange emotion
And everywhere that you may turn
Your marked seducer you discern

Her grief into the garden taking Tatyana goes impelled by love
She drops her eyes her heart is aching
Her languor will not let her move
Her eyes shine and her breath has dwindled
Her chest heaves and her cheeks are kindled
With flame that fails as it appears,
There is a roaring in her ears
Night falls the moon already riding
Aloft, the whole of heaven sees
The nightingale's keen melodies
Pour from the boughs where she is hiding
Sleepless, Tatyana would converse
In gentle whispers with her nurse

I cannot sleep nurse it is stifling!
Open the window come sit here
What ails you Tanya? Oh it's trifling
I'm bored tell me a story dear
A story? asked the good old woman
"Of maids and creatures superhuman?
Ah yes I knew such old wives tales
But I grow old and memory fails
How sad it is to be forgetting!
I've fallen on black days my dear—
I lose the thread my mind's not clear
It is no wonder I am fretting
But nurse you still can tell me of Your own young days Were you in love?"

XVIII

What notions! You may find it blameless
But in my youth no one engaged
In talk of love It was thought shameless—
My mother in law would have raged
But you were married nurse said Tanya
How was it? By God's will my Vanya
Was but a boy if truth were told
And I was just thirteen years old
The marriage broker kept on pressing
The matter for a fortnight oh
What tears I shed you do not know
The day my father gave his blessing
They loosed my braids and singing low
Led me to church I had to go

I lived by strangers quite surrounded,
My husband's folk But do you hear?
Ah nurse nurse darling I am hounded
By longing I am ill I fear
I want to cry to sob—oh, nurseyl
My child you're ill! The Lord have mercy!
God grant it's nothing! Welladay!
How can I help you only say!
I'll sprinkle you with holy water
You have a fever Fever no
I I'm in love, she murmured low
The nurse replied God save you daughter!
And crossed the girl and as she made
The sign with shaking hand, she prayed

XX

I am in love poor Tanya uttered
The words again with stifled moan
Dear you are ill the old nurse muttered
I am in love leave me alone
Meanwhile the moon her silver duty
Performing lit the girl's pale beauty
And with a somber splendor shone
On her loose hair her tears and on The bench where the old nurse was seated
In kerchief and long gown of wool
Before her charge whose eyes were full
Whose posture was of one defeated
And while the world in silence slept,
The moon her magic vigil kept

The moon's enchantment so obsessed her
Her soul to distant regions fled
And then a sudden thought possessed her
Go leave me nurse, Tatyana said
Move up the table give me paper
And pen good night Her single taper
Is the benign and silent moon
Alone Tatyana broods and soon
Propped on her elbow she is writing Thinking of Eugene all the while
A young girl's ardor clear of guile
Breathes through the words she is inditing
The letter's ready to be sent
For whom Tatyana is it meant?

I have known women stern and rigid
Great ladies far too proud to fall
As pure as winter and as frigid
I understood them not at all
I marveled at their iron virtue,
Their freezing glances framed to hurt you
And sooth I fled these haughty belles
Upon whose brows methought was hell's Inscription written Ye surrender
All hope for aye who enter here
They like to fill a man with fear
And shun the heart that would be tender
By the Neva it may be you
Have seen such ladies not a few

And where the faithful suitor hovers,
I have seen other belles who bent
A glance upon their urgent lovers
Self-centered and indifferent
And what was my amazement, finding They sought to make love's ties more binding
By an assumed austerity
And fright but bred fidelity
At least if pity seemed to soften
Their voices and their words were kind,
Young love because it is so blind
Would grow more ardent very often,
And the fond fool would then pursue
The unconcerned beloved anew

Why is Tatyana an offender?
Is it because she cannot deem Deceit exists but clings with tender Simplicity to her young dream?
Is it because her love is artless
And she, not knowing men are heartless
Obeys her feelings sans demur
Or because Heaven gifted her
With fiery imagination,
With rebel will and lively mind
And with a heart for love designed A spirit brooking no dictation?
And can you not forgive if she Shows passion's volatility?

Not like a cool coquette who tenders
Her heart and when she likes withdraws
Tatyana like a child surrenders
Herself to love and all its laws
She does not argue by delaying
We win the game that we are playing
And raise love's value cleverly
First let us prick his vanity
With hope then prove it an illusion
Raise doubts that leave his heart perplexed
With jealousy revive it next
And thus reduce him to confusion
Lest sick of pleasure momentarily
The sly thrall struggle to be free

XXVI

But I foresee a fresh objection
And I confess I am perplexed
Could Russia pardon my defection
Should I not give the letter's text
In Russian? And the task's infernal
Tatyana read no Russian journal
She did not speak the language well
And found it rather hard to spell
And so of course the girl decided To write in French What's to be done?
For lady never no not one
Her love in Russian has confided
Our native tongue turns up its nose
At mere epistolary prose

XXVII

They say the ladies should read Russian
But though the arguments are keen
I cannot suffer the discussion—
To find a Moscow magazine
In those white hands would be distressing!
The fair ones, whom you were addressing
With flattering pen and heart aglow
Were all of them, as well you know
My poet friends inclined to stammer
When they employed the mother tongue
We loved them though when we were young
For just those little slips of grammar
The foreign tongue is native to Those lovely lips is it not true?

XXVIII

To see a pedant in a bonnet!
A scholar in a yellow shawl!
Pray God I do not come upon it
Where guests disperse or at a ball!
I hate red lips that are unsmiling
And likewise do not find beguiling
The sound of Russian when correct
Slight errors have a choice effect
Perhaps heeding the journals clamor
The younger beauties will declare
That poetry is their affair
And will accustom us to grammar
But as for me my loving praise
Is for the good old fashioned ways

XXIX

My heart will as of old be shaken
Touched by the careless twittering
The phrasing awkward or mistaken
Of some attractive little thing
I am not given to repentance—
French turns will please me in a sentence
As do the sins of years long fled
Or light verse that our fathers read
Enough 'Tis time that I presented
The letter to you quite intact
By God! I wish I could retract
Was ever harder task invented?
Parny's sad tenderness is now
No more the vogue you will allow

XXX

Singer of feasts and tender sorrow
If only you were with me still I might indeed make bold to borrow
Your magic music and your skill
Your version of Tatyana's letter
Would be in every way far better
Than anything that I could do—
I bow and cede my rights to you
But no our paths have separated
To praises unaccustomed grown
Beneath the Finnish sky alone
Among sad cliffs he moves I'm fated
To mourn his absence and in vain
He does not even guess my pain

XXXI

Tatyana's letter lies before me,
 I treasure it most piously,
 These artless lines can never bore me,
 They touch the springs of reverie
 Who taught her how to be so lavish
 With ardent words and how to ravish
 The heart with virgin tenderness?
 Where did she learn this wild excess?
 Love's discourse perilous delicious,
 She knew I wonder how I fear
 The version of it given here
 Is like a copy pale and vicious
 Or like an air from Freischütz played
 By someone awkward and afraid

Tatyana's Letter to Onegin

*I write you and my act is serving
 As my confession Why say more?
 I know of what I am deserving—
 That you should scorn me or ignore
 But for my wretched fate preserving
 A drop of pity you'll forbear
 To give me over to despair
 I first resolved upon refraining
 From speech you never would have learned
 The secret shame with which I burned
 If there had been a hope remaining
 That I should see you once a week
 Or less that I should hear you speak
 And answer with the barest greeting*

*But have one thing when you were gone
 One thing alone to think upon
 For days until another meeting
 But you're unsociable they say
 The country and its dulness bore you
 We we don't shine in any way
 But have a warm frank welcome for you*

*Why did you come to visit us?
 Here in this village unfrequented
 Not knowing you I would not thus Have learned how hearts can be tormented
 I might (who knows?) have grown contented
 My girlish dreams forever stilled
 And found a partner in another
 And been a faithful wife and mother
 And loved the duties well fulfilled*

*Another! No I could have given
 My heart to one and one alone!
 It was decreed the will of Heaven
 Ordains it so I am your own
 All my past life has had one meaning—
 That I should meet you God on High
 Has sent you and I shall be leaning
 On your protection till I die
 You came in dreams I feared to waken
 I loved your image even then
 I trembled at your glance and when You spoke my very soul was shaken
 Only a dream? It could not be!
 The moment that I saw you coming
 I burned my pulses started drumming
 And my heart whispered it is he!
 Yes deep within I had the feeling
 When at my tasks of charity*

Or when the world about me reeling
I looked for peace in prayer kneeling
That silently you spoke to me
Just now did I not see you flitting
Through the dim room where I am sitting,
To stand dear vision by my bed?
Was it not you who gently gave me
A word to solace and to save me
The hope on which my heart is fed?
Are you a guardian angel to me?
Or but a tempter to undo me?
Dispel my doubts! My mind's awl
Perhaps this is a mad delusion
The folly of a simple girl
Fate plans a different conclusion
So be it! Now my destiny
Lies in your hands for you to fashion
Forgive the tears you wring from me
I throw myself on your compassion
Imagine here I am alone
With none to understand or cherish
My restless thoughts and I must perish
Stuffed in solitude unknown
I wait when once your look has spoken
The heart once more with hope will glow,
Or a deserved reproach will show
The painful dream forever broken!
Reread I cannot I must end
The fear the shame are past endurance
Upon your honor I depend
And lean upon it with assurance

XXXII

Tatyana moans, and as she shivers
The letter shakes she heaves a sigh
Upon her tongue the wafer quivers—
Both tongue and seal are pink are dry
Her nightgown slips from off her shoulder,
And her head sinks 'The dawn grows bolder
And soon the east will be alight
The moon is fading with the night
The lifting mist reveals the pleasant
Pale valley and the silver stream
The first shy rays begin to gleam
The shepherd's horn awakes the peasant
Tis morning all the world's astir
It makes no difference to her

XXXIII

Dawn's air is sweet she does not feel it
She sits with downcast head too lax
To take the letter up and seal it
With her neat monogram in wax
The old gray nurse thinks she is napping
And enters softly without rapping
Upon her tray a steaming cup
Come now my child it's time get up
But you're already dressed! God save me,
You are an early bird! Last night
I left you in a dreadful fright
But never mind the turn you gave me
I see the pain has left no trace
A poppy could not match your face

XXXIV

"Ah, nurse I know you won't refuse me
 "Of course not, darling only say
 Don't think but really don't accuse me
 Do me this favor nurse I pray
 God knows how gladly only say it
 Then bid your grandson—don't delay it—
 Carry this letter secretly
 To O our neighbor Oh, but he Must breathe no word must never mention
 My name Yes but to whom, my dear?
 I must be growing dull I fear
 Although indeed I paid attention
 We have so many neighbors I Could scarcely count them, should I try

XXXV

"How dull witted you are, nurse truly!
 The mind grows blunt as one grows old,
 Age comes to all, my darling duly
 The master had no need to scold
 When I was young—a mere suggestion
 Ah nurse your mind is not in question
 What difference does that make to me?
 It is my letter don't you see,
 My letter to Onegin Bless me
 Do not be cross because I fail
 To grasp things But you're growing pale,
 Tanya my dear your looks distress me
 Oh, it is nothing nurse I'll now
 Be sure you have your grandson go

XXVI

The day is done he's not replying
Another day he still is dumb
Dressed early shadow pale and sighing
She waits when will the answer come?
Then Olga's suitor paid a visit
Has he forgotten us—what is it?
Where is your friend? the hostess said
Tatyana trembled and grew red
Something detained him He intended
To come today and without fail
Perhaps what kept him was the mail
Thus Lensky his good friend defended
Tatyana looked as though she heard
A black reproach in every word

At dusk the samovar is gleaming
Upon the table piping hot
And as it hisses gently steaming
The vapor wreathes the china pot
Now Olga sits before it filling
The lustrous tea-cups never spilling
A drop of the dark fragrant stream
A serving lad hands round the cream
Apart Tatyana can but linger
Beside the window on the pane
She breathes again and yet again
And in the mist her little finger
Describes in pensive tracery
The hallowed letters O and E

XXXVIII

But her soul aches and nothing pleases,
 Her eyes betray her with a tear
 The sudden sound of hoofs! She freezes
 Now nearer! Galloping and here
 Is Eugene! By another portal
 Tatyana leaps like nothing mortal
 From porch to court and shadow light
 She flies she flies, nor in her flight
 Looks backward lightning like she rushes
 On past the bright parterre the lawn
 The grove, the bridge the lake and on,
 And fleeing breaks the lilac bushes,
 And gains the brookside breathing fast,
 Where on a rustic bench at last

She falls

He's here! Eugene! she panted
 Oh God what can he think of me?
 Her anguished heart some peace was granted
 By a dark hope of what might be Tatyana burned and shivered asking
 He's coming? But in silence basking
 The country round about was still Save for the chorus on the hill
 Where the maids sang to keep from cheating
 The masters of the berry-crop
 They dared not let their voices drop
 For if th-y sing they can't be eating
 (A shrewd command that perfectly Proves rustic ingenuity!)

Maid's Song

*Merrily my laughing ones
Maidens come and trip it now
Come and form a circle and Foot it neatly on the green!
Girls strike up a melody
Sing a song a happy song
Sing and bring a dashing lad
Hither to our frolic and When he comes ah when he comes
When we see him nearing us
Fly my darlings run away
Pelt the lad with cherries ripe
Cherries and red raspberries
Fling him currants ripe and red
Eavesdroppers be off away!
Not for you our songs are sung
Do not spy upon our games
Come away girls come away!*

Tatyana hears the chorus sounding
But heedlessly, she cannot school
Her shaken heart to stop its pounding
Or wait for her hot cheeks to cool
But still she pants, her terror growing,
And hotter yet the blush is glowing Upon her shamed and flaming cheeks,
Thus a poor moth imprisoned seeks To free its wings and frantic, pushes
Against the palm that holds it tight
Thus a gray hare will quake with fright
Glimpsing behind the distant bushes
A crouching huntsman ill-concealed,
And stop defenceless in the field

XLI

At last she rose and gently sighing
She sought the path, but as she turned Before her, there was no denying Eugene himself with eyes that burned
Stood like a threatening apparition
As though she feared an inquisition
She halted, like one scorched by fire
But what was further to transpire
After this unexpected meeting
I cannot say I've talked so long
That I am feeling far from strong
Forgive me, then for thus retreating
Just now a walk would suit me best
In time I shall relate the rest

Chapter Four

La morale est dans la nature des choses

Necker

I—VII

A woman's love for us increases
The less we love her sooth to say—
She stoops she falls her struggling ceases
Caught fast, she cannot get away
Once lechery that took its pleasure
And boasted bold beyond all measure
And never loved where it desired
Was all the art of love required
In this important sport the jaded
Old monkeys of another age
Were proper people to engage Now Lovelace's renown is faded
Gone with the styles we do not use
With proud perukes and red heeled shoes

VIII

Who would not weary of evasion
And of repeating platitudes
Of holding forth with great persuasion
On themes to which none now alludes
Of finding worn-out prejudices
That even thirteen year-old misses
Would scarcely call intelligent
The subject of an argument?
Who would not tire of threats and rages
Entreaties vows and foolish fears
Deceit and gossip rings and tear
Of letters running to six pages
Mammas and aunts who pry and peer
And friendly husbands heavy cheer?

IX

Thus Eugene thought with melancholy
In his first youth he was the prey
Of many a wild fit of folly
And never said his passions nay
A pampered boy allured by pleasure,
Then disappointed beyond measure,
Wearied by what he had desired
By facile conquest swiftly tired
At noisy gatherings and after,
In silence hearing still the faint
Sad murmur of the soul's complaint
And covering a yawn with laughter—
He killed eight years thus like a dunce—
The flower of life that blooms but once

Allured by neither looks nor station
His courting now was minus zest,
Refused—he soon found consolation
Betrayed—he took a welcome rest
Though he pursued, the chase was palling
Both love and malice scarce recalling
Ladies he left he never missed
Thus for an evening game of whist
A guest comes an indifferent player
Sits down the game is done—he goes
Drives home to take his night's repose
His mood no gloomier no gayer
Not knowing in the morning where When evening comes he will repair

VI

But our Onegin's heart was stricken
When Tanya's tender message came Its girlish fire began to quicken
A swarm of thoughts exempt from blame
Again her pale face looms before him
Her melancholy eyes adore him—
And as on these his fancy dwelt Onegin a pure rapture felt
Perchance he briefly knew the fever
That thrilled him in the days gone by
And yet her trust he'd not belie
He would not play the base deceiver
But to the garden let us race
Where Tanya met him face to face

XII

Two minutes passed with neither speaking
Then he came up to her and said
You wrote me There is no use seeking To disavow it now I read
A pure love's innocent effusion
Your candor filled me with confusion
I read a shy confiding word
And feelings long quiescent stirred
I would not praise you but sincerely
I would requite sincerity
You may expect no less from me
Your frank avowal touched me nearly Hear my confession then I pray
And you shall judge me as you may

XIII

If I were one of those who rather Enjoy staid domesticity,
If as a husband and a father
The kindly fates had fancied me
Where should I seek a dearer treasure?
If for a moment I found pleasure
In cosy scenes of fireside life
You you alone would be my wife
This is no rhetoric I'm using Finding my youthful dream come true—
All candor and all grace in you
You are the helpmeet I'd be choosing
A pledge of every loveliness
And I'd be happy more or less!

XIV

I must confess though loth to hurt you,
I was not born for happiness
I am unworthy of your virtue
I'd bring you nothing but distress
My conscience speaks—pray let me finish,
My love, first warm would soon diminish
Killed by familiarity
Our marriage would mean misery
Then you will weep but who supposes
Your grief will bring me to remorse?
I shall lose patience then of course
Hymen will choose no other roses
To make the path before our feet
Alas too thorny to be sweet

XV

What is there more to be lamented
Than this a household where the wife
Whose spouse has left her discontented
Grieves for the wretch throughout her life
While the dull husband fully knowing
Her worth each year more sullen growing
And jealous in a frigid way
Can only curse his wedding-day!
And I am such Was it naught better
Than that you sought poor innocent
When writing that intelligent
That ardent and most charming letter?
The cruel fates have surely not Designed for you so sad a lot!

XVI

His days and dreams what man recovers?
Never shall I my soul renew
I feel if not indeed a lover's
More than a brother's love for you
Be patient then as with a brother
One cherished fancy for another
A girl will more than once forego
As every spring the saplings show
New leaves for those the tempests scatter
So Heaven wills it Your young soul
Will love again But self-control
My dear is an important matter
Though I was worthy your belief
Impulsiveness may lead to grief

XVII

So Eugene preached and Tanya listened,
Scarce breathing making no replies
And blinded by the tears that glistened
Unheeded in her great dark eyes
He offered her his arm Despairing
With drooping head and languid bearing (Mechanically as they say)
Tatyana took her silent way
Homeward along the kitchen garden,
And when they entered, arm in arm
The company could see no harm
And nothing to remark or pardon
For rustic freedom thus delights
As does proud Moscow, in its rights

In this affair our friend was tested
And behaved well you will agree
Thus once again he manifested
His soul's innate nobility
Though there are people most malicious
Who called him everything that's vicious
And had no word for him but blame—
Both friends and foes (they're all the same)
We need the wit that nature gave us
To face our foes as all men must
But from the ones we love and trust,
From our good friends may Heaven save us!
These friends! 'twas not for nothing that They came into my mind so pat

XIX

My meaning? Nothing My intention
Is but to lull dark thoughts to sleep
But in parenthesis I mention
There is no calumny so deep
Born of a liar in an attic
There is no notion so erratic
No fancy of a worldly mob
No coarse mot of a witty snob
That will not be ten times repeated
To decent folk and with a smile
By your good friend all without guile,
And no a single word deleted
But he will back you while you live
He loves you as a relative!

XX

H m h m! dear reader pray apprise me,
Are all your relatives quite well?
You might be pleased—if so advise me—
To have your humble se va it tell
What the word relatives embraces
It means the people to whose faces
We show at all times due respect,
And whom we kiss as they expect
And visit at the Christmas season
Unless indeed we send a card
In token of our warm regard
Lest they should miss us beyond reason
All during the ensuing year
And so God grant them health and cheer!

XXI

If friends and kin are undeserving
 You may rely upon the fair,
 And firmly count upon preserving
 Their love, though tempests fill the air
 Oh yes But there's the whirl of fashion,
 And then the wayward course of passion,
 And the opinion of the town
 The sex of course is light as down
 And while a husband is respected
 By any wife who's virtuous
 By words and looks insidious
 The faithful one is soon affected
 For woman is a tender fool,
 And love is but the devil's tool

XXII

On whom shall we bestow affection,
 And whom shall we confide in pray?
 In whom discover no defection?
 Who will assent to all we say?
 Who will not seek our faults to flout us?
 Who will not spread vile lies about us?
 Who will not weary us with speed?
 Who will supply our every need?
 It is a phantom you are chasing
 And vainer labor there is none—
 Love your own self and so have done!
 This estimable friend embracing
 You prove you know beyond a doubt,
 Dear reader what you are about

XXIII

What of the tryst then so ill fared?
 Alas it is not hard to guess!
 The pains of love still agitated
 The soul so shy of happiness
 The promise of her spring was blighted
 But love grew greater, unrequited
 She could but peak and pine and weep,
 And n'ght would find her far from sleep
 Lost like a muted sound and vanished
 Her virgin calm is of the past
 Poor Tanya's youth is fading fast
 And health and hope and joy are banished
 Thus darkly drives the storm that shrouds
 The blithest dawn in sullen clouds

XXIV

Tatyana's bloom is all but faded
 She sighs she pines both day and night
 And all distraction finds her jaded
 She looks on nothing with delight
 The neighbors' heads and tongues are wagging
 High time she wed! But I am dragging
 My story out and it is wrong
 To dwell on sorry things so long
 Now let me speak of something jolly
 Portraying happy love for you
 Yet bidding the poor girl adieu
 I am assailed by melancholy
 Forgive me Tanya from the start
 Has held the first place in my heart

From hour to hour yet more enraptured
 By the young Olga's winning ways
 Vladimir was completely captured
 And found his chains a thing to praise
 Always together now they're sitting
 In her room while the light is flitting,
 Or in the morning arm in arm
 The two explore the garden's charm.
 And think of it! So timid is he
 That only once in a great while,
 Emboldened by his Olga's smile,
 And with love's sweet confusion dizzy,
 He dares to trifle with a tress
 Or kiss the hem of her dear dress

XXVI

Sometimes he reads to Olga trying To choose such moral tale as might Have passages on nature's wing
 With those Chateaubriand could write,
 And certain pages (fabrications,
 A snare to maids' imaginations)
 He passes over in a rush
 And not without a tell-tale blush
 At whiles upon their elbows leaning
 In grave seclusion as is fit,
 Above the chess-board they will sit,
 And ponder each move's secret meaning
 Till Lensky too absorbed to look
 With his own pawn takes his own rook

XXVII

- ✓ If he goes home, his dreams still linger
 About his Olga, it may be Having her album there to finger
 He decorates it earnestly
 In ink or colors he is sketching
 A rustic view that she found fetching
 A tomb a temple vowed to love
 A lyre that bears a little dove
 Or on the sheet another wrote on A sweet remembrance to ensure Below his other's signature
 ✓ He writes a verse for her to dote on—
 A passing thought's enduring trace
 ✓ That time and change may not erase.

XXVIII

Of course you've often seen that treasure,
 The album of a country miss
 Scrawled over by her friends at leisure
 With blotted rhyme and criss-cross kiss—
 Where spelling has been sadly spited
 And an eternal friendship plighted
 In hackled as well as hackneyed verse
 That could not very well be worse
 On the first page there's this confection
Qu'ecrirez vous sur ces tablettes?
 Beneath it à à Annette
 And on the last page this reflection
 \ You are the one that I adore,
 \ Who loves you more may write yet more

✓ Here you will find as decoration
 Two hearts a torch and flow'rs be sure,
 And many a solemn protestation
 Of loves that to the grave endure
 But for my part I do not mind
 Inscribing albums of this kind
 I know there'll be a warm reception
 Of any nonsense I set down
 And critics later with a frown
 Or else a smile that's pure deception,
 Will not debate and ponder it
 And search my nonsense for some wit

XXX

But you chance volumes that in Hades
 Once graced the devil's own abode
 You tomes wherewith resplendent ladies
 Torment the rhymesters à la mode
 You handsome albums decorated
 By what Tolstoy's fine brush created,
 Or graced by Baratynsky's pen
 May Heaven blast your page amen!
 When a fine lady seeks to win me
 Her well bound quarto to inscribe,
 I fain would write a diatribe—
 A mocking demon stirs within me
 And prompts something satirical,
 But they demand a madrigal!

XXXI

No smart conceits does Lensky fashion
For Olga's album—not a bit!
His lyrics breathe a candid passion
There is no sparkle here of wit
Dear Olga is his only matter
Her looks her words—he does not flatter
But with the living truth aglow
His verses like a river flow
Thus you Yazykov when affection
For God knows whom inspired your soul
Let the sonorous stanzas roll
And your remarkable collection
Of elegies at some far date
Will tell the story of your fate

XXXII

But hush! Our sternest critic rises
And bids us cast away the wreath
Of elegy that he despises
And throws this challenge in our teeth
Stop crying stop this tiresome quacking
About the self same thing thus clacking
About the past what's done and gone
Enough sing other tunes move on!
Correct you'll bring for our inspection
The classic trumpet sword and mask
You'll bid us free to speed our task,
The frozen funds of intellection—
Eh friend? But no attend again
Write odes odes only gentlemen

"As in the old days poets wrote them—
 That ancient glory still shines bright
 What! only solemn odes? Just quote them
 They're duller than the things we write
 Recall Dmitriyev's castigation
 Why should you have such veneration
 For all that musty rhetoric
 While our sad rhymesters earn a kick?
 Ah! but the elegy is flighty
 Inane and petty while the ode Travels how different a road—
 Its aim is high its meaning mighty
 I'll not debate the point Ye gods!
 Why set two ages thus at odds?

XXXIV

Admiring glory loving freedom
 Vladimir too had odes to write
 But seeing Olga wouldn't read 'em
 The lovelorn boy ignored them quite.
 Lives there a poet who rehearses
 To his dear charmer his own verses?
 They say that life does not afford
 A more magnificent reward
 How blessed the lover who is granted
 The chance to read his modest songs
 To her to whom his heart belongs
 And watch her, languidly enchanted!
 How blessed indeed though she might choose
 Something more certain to amuse.

XXXV

The things that I concoct in lonely
Long hours the melodies I mend
I read not to the crowd but only
To my old nurse, my childhood's friend
Or after dinner I may vary
The boredom nabbing the unwary
Good neighbor who's dropped in on me
I choke him with a tragedy
Or else (joking aside) while strolling
Beside my quiet lake, beset
By tiresome rhymes and vain regret
I frighten the wild ducks by rolling
My tuneful stanzas forth till they Take off and smoothly soar away

XXXVI—XXXVII

And now what of Onegin? Truly
I fear friends lest your patience fail
His daily occupations duly
I shall to pleasure you detail
As hermits live who hope for heaven
He lived—in summer rose at seven
And lightly clad though airs were chill
Walked to the stream below the hill
Gulnare's bold singer emulating
He swam this Hellespont anew
Then dipped into some vile review
Keeping his morning coffee waiting
And next he dressed

XXXVIII—XXXIX

A book, a walk where shadows flitted
And brooklets murmured pleasantly,
And if a black-eyed girl permitted { Sometimes a kiss as fresh as she
A lively horse but not too restive,
A dinner that was rather festive,
Therewith a bottle of light wine,
And solitude—this was, in fine,
Onegin's holy life unheeding
He let the summer season fly
Nor reckoned days as they went by,
No other entertainment needing Forgetting friends and city ways
And tedious planned holidays

Our northern summer, swiftly flying,
Is southern winter's travesty
And even as we are denying Its passage it has ceased to be More often now the sun was clouded
The sky breathed autumn, somber, shrouded
Shorter and shorter grew the days
Sad murmurs filled the woodland ways
As the dark coverts were denuded
Now southward swept the caravan
Of the wild geese a noisy clan
And mists above the meadows brooded,
A tedious season they await Who hear November at the gate

XLI

The hazy dawn commences coldly,
The silent fields abandoned wait
And on the highway marches boldly
The wolf beside his hungry mate
The horse who scents him snorts and quivers,
The traveler observes and shivers
And dashes uphill and is gone
Now from the shed at crack of dawn
The herd no longer drives his cattle,
Nor calls them noons for mustering
Indoors the maid will softly sing
Above her spinning wheels low rattle
Her work the crackling matchwood lights
The friend of wintry cottage nights

XLII

The frosts begin to snap and gleaming
With silver hoar the meadows lie
(The reader waits the rhyme word beaming Well take it since you are so sly!)

The icy river shows a luster
That fine parquet can never muster
And on their skates the merry boys
Now cut the ice with scraping noise
Down to the waterfront there stumbles
A clumsy goose and thinks to put Into the stream her red webbed foot
But stepping forth she slips and tumbles
The first gay snowflakes spin once more
And drop in stars upon the shore

XLIII

What, in the country, when it's dreary,
Can a man do? Go walking there?
This is the season eyes grow weary
Beholding bareness everywhere
On the bleak steppe go horseback riding?
Yes but your horse will soon be sliding
His worn shoe slipping on the ice
And he will throw you in a trice
Stay indoors by a bowl befriended?
Here's Pradt and Scott You do not think
You care to? Check accounts or drink
Till somehow the long evening's ended
And so the morrow passes too—
Your winter is cut out for you

Onegin like Childe Harold scorning
All labor took to pensive ways
An icy bath begins his morning
And then at home all day he stays
Alone and sunk in calculation
He finds sufficient occupation
In billiards with a good blunt cue
And ivory balls not more than two
But as the rural dusk advances
The game he can at last forget
Beside the fire a table's set
He waits and up a troika prances
His roans bring Lensky to the door,
Come it is time to dine once more

The pail is brought the ice is clinking
Round old Moët or Veuve Cliquot
This is what poets should be drinking
And they delight to see it flow
Like Hippocrene it sparkles brightly,
The golden bubbles rising lightly
(The image why of this and that I quote myself and do it pat)
I could not see it without gloating
And once I gave my meager all
To get it friends, do you recall?
How many follies then were floating
Upon the magic of that stream—
What verse what talk, how far a dream!

XLVI

But this bright sibilant potation
Betrays my stomach and although I love it still at the dictation
Of prudence now I drink Bordeaux
Ay is risky if delicious
It's like a mistress gay capricious
Enchanting sparkling frivolous
And empty—so it seems to us
But you Bordeaux I always treasure
As a good comrade one who shares
Our sorrows and our smaller cares
And also our calm hours of leisure,
One whose warm kindness has no end—
Long live Bordeaux, the faithful friend!

The fire is out the ashes shifting
 Have dimmed the golden coal half seen,
 A thread of smoke is upward drifting,
 The hearth breathes warmth, and all's serene,
 Up through the flue the pipe smoke passes
 Upon the table gleam the glasses
 Their rapid bubbles hissing till
 The shadows creep across the sill
 (A friendly glass and friendly chatter
 I've always thought well suited to The hour called entre chien et loup
 The reason doesn't really matter)
 But let us rather now inquire
 What's said beside the fading fire

XLVIII

Well how are the young ladies faring?
 Your Olga? And Tatyana too?
 Pour me a little more be sparing
 Hold on, old fellow, that will do
 The family is well they send you
 Regards But Olga, oh my friend you Should see how lovely she has grown!
 Such shoulders I have never known!
 And what a throat! And what a spirit!
 Let's call some time Take my advice
 You looked in at the house just twice
 And never after that went near it
 But I'm a dunce! They bade me say
 You are to come and named the day

XLIX

Is Yes a birthday celebration—
 Taytana's—comes next Saturday
 You have her mother's invitation
 And Olenka's "Why say them nay?"
 Oh there will be a dreadful babble
 And such a crowd a perfect rabble
 No nobody! You're quite secure
 Only the family I'm sure
 Oblige me! Is it such hard labor?
 Agreed Now that is good of you!
 He said and found his words the cue
 To drink a toast to his fair neighbor
 Then fell again to talking of His precious Olga such is love!

The day was set his heart elated
 When but a fortnight more had fled
 He'd greet the hour so long awaited
 The secrets of the nuptial bed
 And dreaming of his exultation
 He never thought of the vexation
 That Hymen brings, the grief and pain,
 And the cool yawns that come again
 While we with married life not smitten
 Are certain that it only means
 A series of fatiguing scenes
 Such stuff as Lafontaine has written Ah my poor Lensky he was made
 For such a life I am afraid

LI

Beloved or such was his conviction,
He was in bliss Indeed thrice blessed
Is he who can believe a fiction
Who lulling reason comes to rest
In the soft luxury of feeling
Like a poor sot to shelter reeling
Or (since it s ugly to be drunk)
An insect in a flower sunk
But wretched is the man who never Can be surprised, who is not stirred
By a translated move or word
Who cannot feel he is too clever,
Whose heart experience has chilled
Whose raptures are forever stilled

Chapter Five

*Be thou spared these fearful dreams
Thou my sweet Svetlana*

Zhukovsky

I

That year was extraordinary,
The autumn seemed so loth to go
Upon the third of January
At last by night arrived the snow
Tatyana, still an early riser,
Found a white picture to surprise her
The courtyard white a white parterre
The roofs, the fence all molded fair
The frost work o'er the panes was twining
The trees in wintry silver gleamed
And in the court gay magpies screamed
While winter's carpet softly shining
Upon the distant hills lay light
And all she looked on glistened white

Here's winter! The triumphant peasant
Upon his sledge tries out the road
His mare scents snow upon the pleasant
Keen air and trots without a goad
The bold kibitka swiftly traces Two fluffy furrows as it races
The driver on his box we note
With his red belt and sheepskin coat
A serf boy takes his dog our sleighing
Himself transformed into a horse
One finger's frostbitten of course,
But nothing hurts when you are playing
And at the window not too grim
His mother stands and threatens him

Such vulgar scenes as these despising
You may dismiss them as unfit
For verse—it would not be surprising,
There's little here that's exquisite
Another at a god's dictation
Described with frenzied inspiration
First snow and delicately wrote
Of wintry pleasures, you will dote
Upon those lines of his commending
The glories of these frosty days
Like secret promenades in sleighs
But I my friend am not contending
With you nor yet with you who spin
Fine tales about your fair young Finn

Tanya, though she could give no reason,
Was yet a thorough Russian, hence
She loved the Russian winter season
And its cold white magnificence
The hoar frost in the sun a shimmer
And sleighing and, when light grew dimmer,
The snows still gleaming softly pink,
And the long evenings black as ink
Yuletide they duly celebrated
As custom bade with charm and spell
The maids would gleefully foretell
To the young ladies what was fated,
And promised them each year again
A soldier spouse and a campaign

Tanya with simple faith defended
The people's lore of days gone by
She knew what dreams and cards portended
And what the moon might signify
She quaked at omens all around her
Were signs and warnings to confound her—
Her heart assailed where'er she went
By some obscure presentiment
Upon the stove the cat elected
To wash his face with careful paw
And purr the while Tatyana saw
At once that guests might be expected
If on the left she would espy
A slender crescent riding high

Her face would pale her body quivered
And when a star dropped down the sky
And into golden fragments shivered
She'd watch its flight with anxious eye,
And hurriedly before it perished
Confide to it the wish she cherished
If she encountered unaware
A black frocked monk or if a hare
Should cross her path while she was walking
She would go stumbling down the road
In dread of what this might forebode
She fancied ghosts behind her stalking
And terror stricken would await
The blow of a malignant fate.

* And yet she found it no affliction—
 Her terror held a secret charm
 Since nature, fond of contradiction,
 Allows a zest to our alarm
 Now Yule tide brings its fun and folly
 The young tell fortunes, all are jolly,
 For carefree youth knows no regret
 Life vista gleams before it yet
 The aged at the grave's grim portal
 Through spectacles with failing eyes,
 Tell fortunes too but otherwise
 The joys they knew have all proved mortal
 No matter hisping like a child,
 Hope lies to them, and they're beguiled

Tatyana stares in fascination,
 Seeing the molten wax assume A shape wherein imagination
 Prefigures joy to come, or doom
 Now from the dish where they are lying
 The rings are plucked each maiden, sighing,
Seeks omens in the song they sing
This ditty sounds for Tanya's ring
"There peasants, rich beyond all measure,
Can shovel silver with a spade
We sing about a lucky maid
For glory will be hers, and treasure!
The tune however, threatens her,
Pussy is what the girls prefer

IX

A frosty night the heavens muster
A starry host of choring spheres
That shine with an harmonious luster
Tatyana in the court appears
And careless of the cold is training
A mirror on the moon now waning
The image trembling in the glass
Is but the wistful moon's alas!
The crunch of snow a step approaches
Straight to the stranger Tanya speeds
Her tender voice is like a reed's
And rash the question that she broaches
Your name is—what? He passes on,
But first he answers Agafon

Tanya prepared for fortune telling
As her good nurse would have her do
And in the bath house not the dwelling
They set a table laid for two
But she took fright our shy Tatyana
I too recalling poor Svetlana
As suddenly grew timorous
So fortune telling's not for us
Tanya her silken belt untying
Undressed at last and went to bed
Sweet Lel now hovers o'er her head,
And one may find a mirror lying Beneath her pillow Darkness keeps
All secrets safe Tatyana sleeps

XI

She dreams And wonders are appearing Before her now without a doubt
She walks across a snowy clearing
There a gloom and darkness all about Amid the snowdrifts, seething roaring
A torrent gray with foam is pouring
Darkly it rushes on amain,
A thing the winter could not chain
By a slim icicle united Two slender boughs are flung across
The waters, where they boil and toss
And by this shaking bridge affrighted,
The helpless girl can do no more
Than halt bewildered on the shore

XII

She chides the waters that impede her
But naught avails her girlish wrath
No helping hand is near to lead her Across in safety to the path
A snowdrift stirs it falls asunder
Just fancy who appears from under!
A shaggy bear! At Tanya's cry
The creature bellows in reply
As his repellent aid he proffers,
The frightened maiden gathers strength
And puts her little hand at length
Upon the sharp-clawed paw he offers
And steps across her blood congeals
The bear is marching at her heels

XIII

Look back she dare not fear would blind her
She hurries but the dreadful shape
Of her rough lackey is behind her
In vain she struggles to escape
Forward with groan and grunt he lunges
And into the deep forest plunges
In still and somber beauty stand
The pines their boughs on every hand
Tufted with snow the stars are shining
Through lofty tree tops everywhere,
Birch linden aspen all are bare
The road is lost and past divining
The rapids and the underbrush
Deep drifted in the snowy hush

XIV

Into the woods pursued she presses
The snow is reaching to her knee
A branch leans down to snare her tresses
To scratch her neck and stubbornly
Plucks at the ear rings she is wearing
Her trinkets rudely from her tearing
Her small wet slippers next to go
All covered with the brittle snow
She drops her handkerchief and shivers Afraid to stop the bear is near
She dare not lift for shame and fear
Her trailing skirt with hand that quivers
She runs he follows on and on
She can no more her strength is gone

XV

She falls into the snow alertly
 The shaggy monster seizes her
 And in his arms she lies inertly,
 She does not breathe she does not stir,
 Along the forest path he crashes
 And to a humble cottage dashes
 Crowding the trees about it grow,
 And it is weighted down with snow
 One window glimmers bright and rosy,
 Within a noisy clatter swells
 The bear says Here my gossip dwells
 Come warm yourself where it is cozy
 And doing with her as he will,
 He lays her down upon the sill

XVI

Recovered Tanya pale and shrinking
 Looks round the bear is gone, at least
 She hears wild shouts and glasses clinking
 As at a mighty funeral feast
 The noise is queer and terrifying
 With caution through the key hole spying
 She sees Why who would credit it?
 About the table monsters sit!
 One is a horned and dog faced creature
 One has a cock's head plain to see
 And there's a witch with a goatee,
 A dwarf, whose tail is quite a feature,
 A haughty skeleton and that Is half a crane and half a cat

More horrors here a lobster riding
A spider here a red-capped skull
A goose's snaky neck bestriding—
Most fearful and most wonderfull
A wind mill all alone is whirling
Its wings with crazy motions twirling,
They bark and whistle sing and screech;
To horse's stamp and human speech!
And in the crowd that filled the hovel
Aghast, Tatyana recognized
The dreaded one, the dearly prized
The very hero of our novell
Onegin sits and drinks a health
And glances at the door by stealth

His slightest move is overawing
He drinks with greedy howls they swill,
He laughs and they are all guffawing,
He frowns and everyone is still It's plain that here he is the master
No longer fearful of disaster,
But curious as maidens are,
Tatyana sets the door ajar
A sudden gust of wind surprises
The crowd of house sprites blowing out
The lights bewildering the rout
With flashing eyes Onegin rises
And scrapes his chair along the floor
All rise he marches to the door

XIX

Consumed with terror, Tanya, quaking,
 Would fly the place she cannot stir,
 For all the efforts she is making,
 No single sound escapes from her,
 Eugene flings wide the door defenseless,
 The poor girl stands there almost senseless,
 She hears the raucous laughter swell
 And sees the gaping fiends of hell
 The horns and hoofs the whiskered faces
 The tails and tusks and bloody jaws
 The crooked trunks the gleaming claws
 The bony hands the sly grimaces,
 All point to her and all combine
 In shouting fiercely Minel She's minel

XX

She's minel cries Eugene stern and daring,
 They vanish claimed by the unknown
 The chilly dark the girl is sharing
 With Eugene and with him alone
 His gentle touch nowise dismays her,
 As on a shaky bench he lays her
 And on her shoulder leans his head
 When suddenly they're visited
 By Lensky and his love, light flashes
 Eugene berates them rolls his eyes
 And lifts his hand as who defies
 Unbidden guests the scene abashes
 Tatyana and with failing breath
 The maiden lies there pale as death

XXI

The quarrel grows, Onegin quickly
Leaps for a knife and Lensky falls
The fearful shadows gather thickly
A horrid shout assails the walls
And leaves the little hovel shaking Tatyana terror struck is waking
Her dear familiar room shows plain
And through the frosty window pane
The dawn shines ruddy Olga rushes
In to her sister swallow light
Her rosy cheeks are not less bright
Than in the north Aurora's blushes
Tell me your dream all breathlessly
She cries Whom Tanya did you see?

XXII

But, every interruption spurning
She lies as though she has not heard
Her book in hand, and slowly turning
Page after page says not a word
Although her book has no pretensions
To holding poets' sweet inventions
Deep truths or well-drawn scenes—yet not Racine or Virgil Walter Scott
Or Seneca's or Byron's pages
Or Fashion Journal could enthral
As did this author chief of all
Diviners and Chaldean sages
This Martin Zadeka it seems
Was the interpreter of dreams

XXIII

It happened that a peddler tendered
 This learned opus one fine day
 To Tanya and therewith surrendered
 A prize that chanced to come his way
Malvine—because the set was broken
 Three fifty was the price bespoken
 And in exchange he took as well
 Volume the third of Marmontel
 Two Petriads and a collection
 Of fables and a grammar too
 She thumbed her Martin till he knew
 No rival in the girl's affection
 He offered solace and delight
 And slept beside her every night

The dream alarms her and not knowing
 What hidden meaning in its lies
 She searches for a passage showing
 What such a nightmare signifies
 Some clue the index may afford her
 Where set in alphabetic order
 She finds abyss ape bear bridge cave
 Dirk door eclipse fir ghost ice knave
 Etcetera The glosses vex her
 Her growing doubts they cannot still
 She fears the dream bodes only ill
 And yet the auguries perplex her
 The dream pervades her mournful moods,
 And so for days poor Tanya broods

XXV

But lo! from out the morning valley
 The rosy dawn brings forth the sun
 And with good cheer and merry sally
 The name-day feast is soon begun
 The guests are early in arriving Whole families of neighbors driving
 Up to the steps in coach and shay
Calash kibitka crowded sleigh
 The hall is packed to suffocation
 The parlors crowded barking pugs
 And girls who kiss with laughs and hugs,
 Increase the din of celebration
 Guests bow and scrape within the door
 And nurses scream and children roar

Beside his wife that chubby charmer
 Plump Pustyakov strides heavily
 Here comes Gvozdin a first rate farmer
 Whose peasants live in beggary
 The two Skotinins gray as sages
 Line up with children of all ages
 From two to thirty in a row
 Here's Petushkov a rural beau
 My cousin sleepy-eyed Buyanov
 Down in his hair with visored cap
 (I'm certain that you know the chap)
 The old fat counselor Flyanov
 A gossip glutton clown and cheat
 Who likes a bribe as much as meat

XXVII

Among the crush of people passes
 Leading his offspring Kharlikov
 With them a red wigged man in glasses
 The wit Triquet late of Tambov
 His pocket burns it holds a treasure
 A song he brings for Tanya's pleasure
 All children know the melody
Reveillez vous belle endormie
 The verses came—but who would know it?—
 From a moth eaten almanac,
 He rescued them and with the knack
 That argues a resourceful poet,
 Eliminated belle Nina
 Inserting belle Tatiana

XXVIII

Behold! from town arrives—what rapture!
 The company commander whom Each rural mother hopes to capture
 The idol of all maids in bloom
 His news sets girlish hearts to drumming
 A regimental band is coming!
 The colonel's sending it A ball!
 Upon each other's necks they fall,
 Anticipating this distraction
 But dinner's served and arm in arm
 The couples to the table swarm
 Tanya's the center of attraction
 They cross themselves their heads incline
 Then buzzing all sit down to dine

Awhile all conversation ceases
 They chew The pleasant prandial chink
 Of plates and silverware increases
 The touching glasses chime and clink
 The feast goes on but soon thereafter
 The room grows loud with talk and laughter
 And none can hear his neighbor speak
 They chortle, argue shout and squeak
 And while they all are in high feather
 The door swings wide and Lensky's here
 Onegin too At last, oh dear!
 The hostess cries Guests squeeze together
 Move plates and chairs with ready glee,
 And seat the two friends hastily

XXX

They face Tatyana, who is paler
 Than is the moon one sees at dawn
 With the emotions that assail her
 She trembles like a hunted fawn
 Her darkening eyes she never raises
 With stormy passion's heat she blazes
 She suffocates she scarcely hears
 The two friends greetings and the tears
 Are all but flowing her heart flutters
 The poor thing nearly swoons she's ill
 But now her reason and her will Prevail Two words she softly mutters
 And that between her teeth, to greet
 These guests, and somehow keeps her seat

XXXI

Eugene had long abominated
 High tragedy and swoons and tears
 And girlish fits of nerves he hated
He'd suffered from such things for years
The feast he was quite unprepared for
'Twas not the sort of thing he cared for
And having noted, in a pet
That poor Tatyana was upset,
 He dropped his eyes in irritation
And sulked, and swore that he would trim
His friend for thus misleading him
 Now soothed by this anticipation
He set his mind to work with zest, Caricaturing every guest

XXXII

Eugene was not alone in noting
 Tatyana's trouble but each eye
 Was at that moment busy gloating
 Upon a succulent fat pie
 (Alas too salty) and observing
 A pitch sealed bottle they were serving
 As a fit sequel to the roast
 Wine of the Don to drink a toast
 And then appeared a row of glasses
 Each long and narrow as your waist
 Zizi that asks to be embraced
 My soul's fair crystal what surpasses
 Your charm? My verses sang your praise
 You made me drunk in other days

XXIII

Released from the damp cork the bottle
 Pops the wine fizzes and Triquet
 Whom silence was about to throttle
 With dignity brings forth his lay
The gathering, affected by it
Before it's heard, is grave and quiet
Tatyana breathless, cannot stir,
Triquet turns with his sheet to her
And sings, off key The song is greeted With shouts and plaudits Tanya now
Is forced to curtsey, to his bow
Though great the poet's not conceited,
His toast rings out the first of all
 Then he presents the madrigal

Very ^{be}

All greeted and congratulated
Tatyana who spoke each one fair
Eugene as he his turn awaited
Observed the girl's embarrassed air
Her sad fatigue her helpless languor
And pity took the place of anger
He bowed to her without a word
But somehow his mere look averred
Deep tenderness perhaps he meant it
Or else he may deliberately
Have played a prank in coquetry
Or somehow couldn't quite prevent it
But tenderness his look did show
And Tanya's heart began to glow

XXXV

The chairs shoved backward scrape the flooring,
All crowd into the drawing room
Like bees that from the hive are pouring
Into a meadow sweet with bloom
The feast makes every move a labor
And neighbor wheezes unto neighbor
The ladies sit beside the fire
The girls, off by themselves, conspire
Green tables are set up alluring
The gamblers worthy men and bold
Ombre and Boston claim the old
And more play whist, whose fime s enduring—
A most tedious family
All greedy boredom s progeny

The whist players are lion hearted
They ve played eight rubbers at a stretch
Eight times changed places since they started
They stop because the servants fetch
The tea I note the hour or nearly By dinner, tea and supper merely Off in the country we can say
What time it is with no Breguet
Except the stomach I may mention
In passing that my stanzas speak
Of feasts and sundry foods and eke
Of corks with much the same attention
That to such matters Homer pays
Who s had three thousand years of praise

XXXVII—XXXIX

But here is tea the girls demurely
 Their steaming cups have barely stirred
 When sweetly through the doors and surely Passoon and flute at once are heard
 Because the tune is so diverting
His cup of tea with rum deserting
The local Paris Petushkov
Comes up to carry Olga off
And Lensky—Tanya, Karhlíkova
A virgin of ripe years accepts
Triquet, next follow two adepts
Buyanov leads off Pustyakova
The ballroom summons one and all
Thus brilliantly begins the ball—

XL

At the beginning of my story
 I thought to paint (see Chapter One)
 A northern ball in all its glory
 A thing Albani might have done
But yielding to a dream's distraction
I reminisced of the attraction
That ladies' feet have had for me
Oh I have erred sufficiently In tracking you! I should be moving
On other paths, since youth is spent
And grow with time, intelligent
My style and my affairs improving
And if my novel is to thrive

*Là sotto giorni nubilosi e brevi
Nasce una gente a cui l'morir non dole*

Petrarch

I

Revenge was something of a pleasure,
But Eugene now his friend was gone,
Was bored again beyond all measure,
Olenka too began to yawn
By her dull partner's mood infected
And as she looked about, dejected
For Lensky the cotillion seemed To her a tiresome thing she dreamed
It's over Having supped the gentry
Are glad at last to take a rest
A place is found for every guest
Twixt the maid's attic and the entry,
And gratefully to bed they creep
Eugene alone goes home to sleep

II

All's hushed within the parlor sighing
And snoring heavy Pustyakov
Beside his heavy mate is lying Gvozdin Buyanov Petushkov
And Flyanov somewhat ill encumber
The dining room on chairs they slumber
Upon the floor Triquet we view
In flannels and a night-cap too
The girls with Olga and Tatyana
Are settled they are fast asleep
But at her window fain to weep
Poor Tanya lighted by Diana
Stares out upon the shadowed sea
There is no sleep for such as she

III

Once more Tatyana's heart is drumming
 Delight is mingled with distress
 As she reviews Onegin's coming
 And his brief look of tenderness—
 And then with Olga how he acted!
 She puzzles till she is distracted
 And jealous longing frets the maid—
 As though a chilly hand were laid Upon her heart as though a rumbling
 Black chasm were gaping at her feet
 But ruin at his hands is sweet
 Says Tanya Nay I am not grumbling
 Complaint will make my pain no less
 He cannot give me happiness

Proceed my tale! Here's matter for ye
 Good readers a new face arrives
 Five versts away from Krasnogorye,
 Our Lensky's village lives and thrives
 Mongst thinkers who are few and cloudy
 Zaretsky once a jolly rowdy
 A gambler who won all the stakes
 A tavern tribune chief of rakes
 But now a kind and simple father,
 Albert still a bachelor
 A good landed proprietor
 A friend in need as you will gather—
 Even a man of honor thus
 The times improve and better us!

 Free from digressions Chapter Five

Like giddy youth forever swirling
 In dizzy circles round and round,
 The waltz sends tireless couples twirling
 To flute and viols merry sound
 Revenge approaches so concealing
 A smile, Onegin is appealing
 To Olga First they spin about,
 Then he suggests they sit one out,
 And chats of this and that politely
 A moment and the pair once more
 Are waltzing round the dancing floor
 All wonder whether they see rightly
 And staring in dismayed surprise
 Leashy can scarcely trust his eyes

XLII

Now the mazurka's strains are sounding
 Of old the ballroom used to shake
 To the mazurka with the pounding
 Of heels the stout parquet would quake
 And window sashes rattled loudly
 Not now we like the ladies proudly
 And smoothly glide on polished boards,
 But the provincial town affords
 A place for the old fashioned splendor
 The leaps the heels the whiskers fair,
 But are just the same as what they were
 The country to the past is tender
 Vorges bends to fashion's tyrannies
 The modern Russian's worst disease

XLIII—XLIV

My lively cousin now advancing
 Presents the charming sisters both
 To Eugene who at once goes dancing
 Away with Olga nothing loth
 He leads her nonchalantly gliding
 And in an attitude confiding
 His head above her fondly bent
 Whispers an outworn compliment,
 And presses her soft hand—clauon
 Inflames the girl's conceited face
 My Lensky's fury grows apace
 He waits with jealous indignation
 The end of the mazurka and
 For the cotillon begs her hand

She cannot No? But why? She's given
 Oegin the cotillon Lord!
 What does he hear? She dared He's driven
 To think the girl that he adored
 's but a flirt Though she is barely
 Out of her swaddling-clothes she's fairly Accomplished as a vile coquette!
 Such treachery who could forget?
 Poor Lensky cannot bear his sorrow
 He curses women's whims with force,
 Goes out at once, demands a horse,
 And dashes off Before the morrow
 A brace of pistols and two balls
 Will square accounts whoever fall

 A tavern tribune chief of rakes
 But now a kind and simple father
 Albert still a bachelor
 A good landed proprietor
 A friend in need as you will gather—
 Even a man of honor thus
 The times improve and better us!

Time was when all the world was vying
In praise of his base hardihood
He hit an ace, there's no denying At fifteen feet his aim was good
One day when leading his battalion
He fell from off his Kalmuck stallion
Drunk as an owl into a trench
And so was captured by the French—
A precious pledge! The man was guided By honor's dictates was indeed
A modern Regulus at need
He'd suffer bonds again, provided
That at Very's on credit he Could drain each morning bottles three

VI

He well knew how to set you laughing,
Made game of fools and being bent
On secret or on open chaffing
Could hoodwink the intelligent
Though on occasion like a duffer
This clever jester had to suffer,
And for the pranks he liked to play
Too! punishment once in a way
He liked debate, and sometimes rudely
And sometimes neatly made retort
And shrewdly held his peace in sport
Would start a quarrel quite as shrewdly
To have two friends at daggers drawn
And send them armed, from bed at dawn,

Or into concord gently shame them
To earn a luncheon from the two
And later privately defame them
With a gay jest and words untrue
Sed alia tempora! Such jolly
Pranks (like love's dream another folly)
Belong to youth with youth are fled
And my Zaretsky as I said
Beneath the shade of his acacias
Has found a refuge from the blast
And lives like a true sage at last Plants cabbages like old Horatius
And raises fowls while at his knee
The children learn their A B-C

VIII

He was no fool and Eugene ready
To praise his mind if not his heart
Admired his judgment always steady
And found his comments sane and smart
He often paid a call surmising
A welcome it was not surprising
For Eugene to behold him there
That morning gay and debonaire
He barely spoke his urgent mission
Zaretsky was not one to shirk—
At once he offered with a smirk
A note of Lensky's composition
Onegin took the letter to The window where he read it through.

IX

The poet swift in thought and action
With most polite and cool address,
Herein demanded satisfaction,
For honor could require no less
The messenger was not kept waiting
Onegin without hesitating
Replied as though he little cared
What came of it Always prepared
On hearing this Zaretsky started
To go he had no wish to stay,
And he was busy anyway
And so without more words, departed,
But left alone Onegin sighed,
With his own self dissatisfied

And rightly for Onegin sitting
In judgment on himself could be Severe and he was not acquitting
Himself even in privacy
First he accused himself of mocking
Young timid love, and that was shocking
Second the poet was a fool
But at eighteen that is the rule
And holding him in such affection
Eugene should not have been so rash,
Not thus have sought to cut a dash
Nor shown a fighter's predilection
But, like a man of worth and sense,
Have acted with intelligence

XI

Had he been quicker in revealing—
Instead of bristling at the start—
That he was yet a man of feeling
He'd have disarmed the youthful heart
Too late he thinks And then that vicious
Old duelist can be malicious
He thrust his nose in right away
And he would have a deal to say
Of course one should reward his gabble
With scorn yet smiles upon the lips
Of fools and slyly whispered quips
Lo! the opinion of the rabble
Is honor's mainspring I'll be bound—
The thing that makes the world go round

The poet with impatience burning
Sits home awaiting the reply
And here the gossip is returning
With solemn gait and sparkling eye
The young Othello is delighted!
He feared that he had not incited
The rogue who somehow would escape
By a sly dodge or ready jape
He savors the few words that settle His doubts for meet they surely will
At dawn tomorrow near the mill
Then let each man be on his mettle
They'll cock the trigger and let fly
Their mark the temple or the thigh

Each hour of torment added fuel
To Lensky's wrath he would not see
The base coquette before the duel,
He marked the time and presently
He waved his hand as one who'd rue it
And was at Olga's ere he knew it!
He was convinced the fickle fair
Would be dismayed to see him there,
But no!—straight down the steps to meet him
Unhesitatingly she ran,
Bewildering the wretched man
And turned a joyful face to greet him
In the same carefree lively way
As upon any other day

XIV

Why did you leave the maiden asked him,
So very early yesterday?
Deeply disturbed as thus she tasked him
Poor Lensky scarce knew what to say
His jealousy and his vexation
Were banished by her animation
Her look so candid and serene,
Her sweet simplicity of mien!
He gazes and his heart is riven
She loves him still and in remorse
He now repents him of the course
He took and fain would be forgiven
He trembles cannot say a word
His heart leaps up his soul is stirred

XV—XVII

In Olga's presence poor Vladimir
Ignores what happened yesterday
And full of grief the wistful dreamer
Broods over all he dare not say
 From threatened ruin I'll retrieve her
I shall not suffer the deceiver
To tempt with tender word and sigh
The youthful heart I will defy
The poisonous vile worm that mumbles
The lily stem and withers so
The bud that just begins to blow
But ere tis open fades and crumbles
These proud reflections all portend
I'll have a duel with my friend

XVIII

Had he but known the wounding sorrow
That burdened my Tatyana's heart!
Had Tanya known that on the morrow
Fresh grief would cause a keener smart—
Could she but have foreseen the meeting
And the two friends for death competing
She then as love has power to do
Might have united them anew!
But none as yet came near divining
Her passion not by chance or skill
Eugene was apt at keeping still In secret Tanya was repining
The nurse alone might well have guessed,
But she was slow of wit at best

XIX

All evening Lensky was distracted,
 A glum and next a merry man,
 But nurselings of the Muse have acted
 Like this since first the world began,
 With frowning brow he would be sitting
 At the spinet then swiftly quitting
 The music, he would whisper low
 To Olga I am happy—no?
 But it is late, he should be leaving
 His heart is all but crushed with pain,
 And as he says farewell again
 He feels that it must break with grieving
 She looks at him in some dismay
 What ails you?—"Nothing" So—away

XX

At home his pistols claimed attention
 He looked them over boxed them right,
 Undressed and opened—need I mention?—
 Schiller of course by candle light
 But ever sadder ever sonder,
 He has a single thought to ponder
 He seems to see his Olga there
 Unutterably dear and fair
 Inspired by tender melancholy,
 Vladimir shuts the book and then
 There pours in torrents from his pen
 Verse full of amatory folly
 Which he declaims with ecstasy
 Like Delwig drunk in company

By chance, these verses have not perished
 I have them here for you to see
 Oh golden days my springtide cherished
 Ah whither whither did you flee?
 The day to come what is it bearing?
 In vain into the darkness staring
 I try to glimpse it but I trust
 The law of Fate is ever just
 From the drawn bow the arrow leaping
 May pass me by or pierce me through Yet all is well—each has its due
 The hour for waking and for sleeping
 The day of busy cares is blessed
 And blessed the darkness bringing rest

The ray of dawn will shine tomorrow
 And day will brighten wold and wave,
 When I mayhap past joy and sorrow
 Shall know the secrets of the grave
 And Lethe's sluggish tide will swallow
 The poet and the world will follow
 His course no more but oh most dear,
 Will you not come to shed a tear
 Upon the urn and think ill fated!
 He loved me and the dawn of life
 With its unseasonable strife
 To me alone he dedicated!
 Dear friend before this heart is numb—
 Your spouse awaits come to me come!

His strain was languid, dark (romantic,
 We call it- if no trace I find
 Of such a manner, Im pedantic,
 And how it strikes me, never mind)
 The poet did not think of stopping Until near dawn, his head was dropping Upon 'ideal — modish word—
 And sleep at last her boon conferred
 But scarce did consciousness forsake him
 When into the hushed study came
 His neighbor, calling out his name,
Not hesitating to awake him
 "Get up," he cried "Past six I vow, Onegin's waiting for us now'"

XXIV

He erred, for Eugene, hardy sinner,
 Was sleeping, heedless of the clock,
 The shades of night are growing thinner,
 And Lucifer's hailed by the cock
Onegin sleeps and does not worry
 The sun appears a brief snow flurry
 Is gaily whirling overhead
 And still our Eugene lies abed
 In cosy comfort sleeping sweetly
 At last he rouses opens wide
 His drowsy eyes and draws aside
 The bed-curtains awake completely,
 He marks the hour with some dismay
 He must be off without delay

Responding to his hasty ringing
 In runs his valet, prompt Guillot
 His dressing gown and slippers bringing
And hands him linen white as snow
With utmost speed Onegin dresses
And bids his servant, since time presses
 Prepare with him to leave the place
 At once and bear the weapon-case
The sledge awaits He does not tarry
He's in, and flying to the mill
 They come Quite unaffected still He gives his man the arms to carry (Lepage's work), and has him tie
The horses to an oak near by

XXVI

Upon the dam leaned Lensky waiting
 The while Zaretsky with a sneer
 Upon the mill stone dissertating
 Was quite the rustic engineer
 Onegin comes apologizing
 Zaretsky not at all disguising
 Surprise asks Where's your second pray?
 A classicist in such a fray
 And sentimentally devoted To method he would not allow That one be potted anyhow
 But by rule only and he doted
 Upon the good old fashioned ways
 (A bias worthy of our praise)

XXVII

My second? Eugene said Permit me
 My worthy friend, Monsieur Guillot
 If fault there be you will acquit me
 Of making such a choice, I know,
 He is though not renowned or quoted,
 An honest fellow be it noted
 Zaretsky bit his lip quite vexed
 Onegin turned to Lensky next
 Well shall we start? The young Othello
 Responded Why should we delay?
 Behind the mill they went straightway
 Zaretsky and the honest fellow
Went off and talked in solemn wise,
 The foes stood by with downcast eyes

XXVIII

The foes! How long had they been parted
 By this most black and vengeful mood?
 How long since they were happy hearted
 And sharing leisure thoughts and food
 And doings in a friendly fashion?
 But now the prey of evil passion
 Like those whom an old feud inflames
 As in a nightmare each one aims
 At slaughter with a heart of leather
 Were it not better if before
 Those gentle hands were stained with gore
 A laugh would bring the pair together?
 But worldly quarrels breed the dread
 Of worldly scorn and thus are fed

XXIX

The pistols gleam held straight and steady
The hammers on the ramrods ¹ nock
The bullets are crammed down already
One hears the clicking of a cock
Into the pan the powder's sifted
The jagged flint still harmless lifted
Behind a stump among the trees
Guillot is standing ill at ease
Their gestures marked by firm decision
The enemies their mantles doff
And now Zaretsky measures off
Thirty two paces with precision
At either end the two friends stand
Each with a weapon in his hand

XXX

Approach! How calm and cold their faces
As the two foes with even tread
Not aiming yet advance four paces
Four steps toward a narrow bed
First Eugene still advancing duly Begins to raise his pistol coolly
Now five steps more the pair have made
And Lensky firm and unafraid Screws up his eye and is preparing To take aim also—but just then
Onegin fires oh hapless men
Such is the guerdon of your daring!
The fatal hour is past recall
The poet lets his pistol fall

XXXI

His hand upon his breast lays lightly,
And drops His clouded eyes betray
Not pain, but death Thus sparkling whitely
Where the quick sunbeams on it play,
A snowball down the hill goes tumbling
And sinks from sight soon to be crumbling
Onegin frozen with despair
Runs to the poor youth lying there,
And looks and calls him But no power
Avails to rouse him he is gone
The poet in the very dawn
Of life has perished like a flower
That by a sudden storm was drenched
Alas! the altar fire is quenched

XXXII

He did not stir, but like one dreaming
 He lay most strangely there at rest
 The blood from the fresh wound was steaming
 The ball had pierced clean through the breast
 A moment since this heart was quickened
 By poetry and love or sickened
 By hate and dread and strongly beat
 With dancing blood with living heat
 But now, as a house forsaken
 Where all is silent dark and drear
 The shutters closed the windows hear
 With chalk No knock can ever waken
 The lady of the house she's fled—
 Where to, Coss! I nows she never said

XXXIII

'Tis pleasant with a wicked sally
 To make a man feel like an ass
 To see him baited turn and rally
 And glance unwilling in the glass
 Ashamed to own his every feature
 'Tis yet more pleasant if the creature
 Should howl absurdly It is I!
 And yet more pleasant on the sly
 To make his noble coffin ready
 A proper distance to allow Then aiming at his pallid brow
 To hold the pistol straight and steady,
 But yet the pleasure's dulled if he Is launched into eternity

XXXIV

Suppose your pistol shot has ended
A comrade's promising career
One who by a rash glance offended,
Or by an accidental sneer
During a drunken conversation
Or in a fit of blind vexation
Was bold enough to challenge you—
Will not your soul be filled with rue
When on the ground you see him stricken
Upon his brow the mark of death
And watch the failing of his breath
And know that heart will never quicken?
Say, now my friend what will you feel
When he lies deaf to your appeal?

XXXV

Onegin grips his pistol tightly,
 His heart with sore repentance filled
 Beholding Lensky Well? Forthrightly
 The neighbor now declares He's killed
 He's killed! The fearful affirmation
 Makes Eugene quake with consternation
 He calls for help in misery
 And in the sleigh most carefully
 The frozen corpse Zaretsky places,
 To take the awful cargo home
 The horses scent the dead and foam
 Is slobbered over bit and traces
 As sped like arrows from the bow,
 They gallop snorting o'er the snow

Friends for the poet you are grieving
 Cut off before his hopes could bloom,
The world of glory thus bereaving
He came unripe unto the tomb!
Where is the burning agitation
Where is the noble aspiration
The thoughts of youth so high and grave
The tender feelings and the brave?
Where are the storms of love and longing
The thirst for knowledge toil and fame
The dread of vice, the fear of shame
And you bright phantoms round him thronging,
You figments of sweet reverie
You, dreams of sacred poesy?

XXXVII

Mayhap he would have been reputed
Or gloriously served the world
Mayhap the lyre so early muted
Beneath his fingers would have hurled
A mighty music down the ages
Perchance he would have earned the wages
By worldly approbation paid
Or it may be his mar yred shade
Bore to the grave to sleep forever
A holy secret, and a voice
To make the soul of man rejoice
Is lost to us, and he shall never Be thrilled upon Elysian ways
To hear a people's hymn of praise

XXXVIII—XXXIX

Perchance a humble lot awaited
 The poet and he may forsooth
 Like many others have been fated
 To lose his ardor with his youth
 He might have altered and deserted
 The Muse—to marriage been converted
 And worn in comfort far from town
 Horns and a quilted dressing gown
 He might have learned that life was shabby
 At bottom and too bored to think—
 Have been content to eat and drink
 Had gout at forty fat and Habby
 He might have gone to bed and died
 While doctors hemmed and women cried

XL

Whatever was to befall Vladimir
 One thought must fill your heart with pain
 The lover poet pensive dreamer
 Alas! by a friend's hand was slain
 There is the spot if you would know it
 Left of the village where the poet
 Once dwelt two pines are intertwined—
 Below you see the river wind
 That waters well the nearby valley
 The women mowing oft repair
 To plunge their tinkling pitchers there
 And there the weary ploughmen dally
 Beside that stream with shadows laced
 A simple monument is placed

Near by (when springtime rains have peppered
 The fields with droplets once again),
 Weaving his shoe of bast the shepherd
 Sings of the Volga fishermen
 And the young city miss who's fleeing
 A summer in the country racing
 Across the meadowland alone
 Will halt her horse beside the stone
 Tug at the leather rein, and turning
 Her gauzy veil aside to see
 The simple lines there graven, she Will feel her heart with pity burning
 And as she reads, the tears will rise
 To mist her wide and tender eyes

And plunged in sorry thought, more slowly
On through the field the girl will ride,
The while her wistful spirit wholly
With Lensky's fate is occupied,
And what of Olga? is her query
Was all her life thereafter dreary?
Or was the time of sorrow brief?
Where did her sister take her grief?
Where is the saturnine betrayer
The smart coquettes' smart enemy
The exile from society
Who was the fair young poet's slayer?
In time my readers, you shall hear
It all in detail never fear,

XLIII

Not now I love my hero truly,
And shall return to him I vow,
All his concerns recounting duly,
But that is not my pleasure now
The years to rugged prose constrain me
No more can careless rhymes detain me,
And I admit, in penitence,
I court the Muse with indolence
No more I find it quite so pressing
To soil the sheets with flying quill
But other fancies dark and chill
And other cares severe distressing
In festive crowds in solitude
Upon my dreaming soul intrude

\ By new desires I am enchanted
New sorrows come my heart to fret
| The hopes of old will not be granted,
| The olden sorrows I regret
| Ah dream! where has your sweetness vanished?
| Where's youth (the rhyme comes glibly) banished?
| And is the vernal crown of youth
Quite withered now in very truth?
Can the sad thought with which I flirted
In elegiac mood at last
Be fact and can my spring be past
(As I in jest so oft asserted)?
Will it no more return to me?
Shall I be thurty presently?

XLV

The afternoon of life is starting
I must admit the sorry truth
Amen but friendly be our parting,
My frivolous and merry youth!
My thanks for all the hours of gladness,
The tender torments and the sadness
The storm and strife the frequent feast
For all your great gifts and your least
My thanks Alike in peace and riot
I found you good and I attest
I tasted all your joys with zest
Enough! My soul is calm and quiet
As on another road I fare
To rest from loads I used to bear

XLVI

Let me look back Farewell then bowers
Where I would loll without a goal
But lulled by the fond dream that dowers
With joy the contemplative soul!
And you oh youthful inspiration
Come rouse anew imagination--
Upon the dull mind's slumbers break
My little nook do not forsake
Let not the poet's heart know capture
By sullen time, and soon grow wry
And hard and cold and petrify
Here in the world's benumbing rapture
This pool we bathe in friends this muck
In which, God help us we are stuck

Chapter Seven

Moscow Russia's darling daughter Where's your equal to be found?

Dmitriyev

How can one not love Moscow pray?

Baratynsky

*Speak ill of Moscow! There's your traveler!
Where will you find a better place good sir?
Oh yes what's far away that we prefer!*

Griboyedov

I

From nearby hills the snow already Obeying the spring sun's commands
Flows down in muddy streams and steady
Into the flooded meadowlands
Still half asleep nature is meeting
The year's bright dawn with gentle greeting
The heavens glow with azure light
The naked woods surprise the sight,
A delicate green down assuming
The bee deserts her waxen cell
To gather tribute from the dell
Soon the dry valleys will be blooming
The cattle low the nightingale
Was thrilled by night the silent dale

II

Ah, spring fair spring the lovers season
How sad I find you! How you flood
My soul with dreams that challenge reason
And with strange languor fill my blood!
My stricken heart cries out and fails me
When once the breath of spring assails me
Although its touch be soft as fleece,
While I lie lapped in rural peace!
Is it that I was born to languish
And all that sparkles, triumphs sings
Is alien to my breast and brings
No gift but weariness and anguish
To one whose soul has perished and Who sees the dark on every hand?

III

*Or is it that we fail to cherish
The tender leaves but in the spring
Mourn those that autumn doomed to perish,
The while we hear the woodland sing?*
Or are our thoughts in truth so cruel
That nature's season of renewal
But brings to mind our fading years
That no hope of renewal cheers?
Or it may be that we are taken
In our poetic reverie
Far back to a lost spring and we,
By dreams of a far country shaken
Recall with pain the vanished boon
A night of magic and a moon

Kind drones, and you who wisely savor
Your pleasures with a taste more keen
And you who bask in fortune's favor,
And you skilled pupils of Levshin
You rustic Priams and you gentle
Fair ladies who are sentimental—
Spring calls you to the verdant soil,
To sunny gardens fragrant toil
The time of tempting nights approaches,
When every walk fresh wonders yields,
Then hurry hurry to the fields!
Have your own horses pull your coaches,
Or post horses if thus inclined
But fast or slow leave town behind!

And you my reader wise and witty,
In your imported carriage pray
Desert at last the restless city
Where winter long you were so gay
And while my wanton muse rejoices
We'll listen to the forest voices
Upon the nameless river's shore
In that same hamlet where of yore
My Eugene through the winter tarried,
An idle cheerless recluse near Young Tanya whom I still hold dear,
Poor dreamer whom he sadly harried,
But where no more one meets his face
And where he left a lasting trace

Within the hill-encircled valley
Come seek the stream that slowly goes Through meadowland and linden alley
On down to where the river flows
The nightingale this season's lover,
There sings all night wild roses cover
The bank one hears a gentle spring
And where two pines their shadows fling
A gravestone tells its mournful story
The passer by may read it clear
Vladimir Lensky slumber here
Who early found both death and glory,
In such a year at such an age
Take rest, young poet as thy wage

Upon a trailing branch suspended
Above this modest urn there hung
A wreath that by the breeze befriended
Caressed the tomb o'er which it swung
There when the tardy moon was shining
Two girls would come and sadly twining
Their arms about each other creep
To the low grave to sit and weep
But now the tombstone and its story
Are quite forgot The path is now
Overgrown No wreath hangs on the bough,
Alone the shepherd weak and hoary,
As erstwhile comes to hum an air
And plait his humble footgear there

VIII—X

Poor Lenskyl Olga's heart was laden
 With sorrow, but her tears were brief
 Alas! a young and lively maiden
 Can scarce be faithful to her grief
 Another captured her attention
 Another's amorous invention
 Soon found a way to soothe her pain
 An uhlan wooed her not in vain
 She loves an uhlan with devotion
 Already neath the bridal crown
 Before the altar head cast down
 She stands suffused with shy emotion
 Her lowered eyes agleam the while
 And on her lips a careless smile.

XI

Poor Lenskyl Past the grave's grim portal,
 Was the sad singer shocked to learn
 That Olga's love, alas was mortal
 And did his shade in sorrow yearn?
 Or lulled by Lethe's quiet flowing
 And blissful still since all unknowing,
 By nothing stirred where all is dim
 Is this world shut for aye to him?
 Oblivion is waiting for us
 Beyond the grave yes at the end
 The voice of mistress foe and friend,
 Is hushed Alone the angry chorus
 Of heirs is heard indecently
 Disputing your small legacy

XII

Not long the Larin house was waking
To Olga's voice away she went Since now her uhlan was betaking
Himself back to his regiment
The poor old lady broken hearted,
Wept o'er her daughter as they parted
And seemed about to faint and fall
But Tanya had no tears at all
And yet her face was pale and clouded
As that of one beneath a spell
When all went out to say farewell
And round the loaded carriage crowded
She too at length came forth and nigh
The couple stood to say good bye

XIII

As one who through a fog is peering
Tatyana watched them drive away
Till they were out of sight and hearing
She is alone alack a-day!
The comrade upon whom she doted
Her dove her confidante devoted Is snatched away from her by Fate
Who best knows how to separate
She has no aim, no occupation
But like a shadow moves about
Or on the garden gazes out
But nothing offers consolation
Nor eases tears too long suppressed
Nor soothes the ache within her breast

XIV

Tatyana's solitude adds fuel
 To her vain passion day by day,
Her heart speaks ever of the cruel
Onegin also far away
 She will not see him the betrayer
 Nay she must hate her brother's slayer
 The poet is no more his lot
 Was to be readily forgot
 Though he was brave though he was gifted,
His bride was soon content to be Another's and his memory
 Like smoke across the azure drifted
 Two hearts one may perhaps believe
 Yet grieve for him — But wherefore grieve?

By the still stream with dusk descending
 One heard the crickets slender choir
 The dancers from the green were wending
 On the far bank the smoky fire
 Built by the fishermen was flaring
 Now through the open meadow faring
 Where moonlight silvered shrub and stone
 Tatyana dreaming walked alone
 She clambered up a hill commanding
 A village view she seemed to know
 A garden river firt and lo!
 Near by she saw the mansion standing
 Tanya surveys it with a start
 And faster faster throbs her heart

XVI

A trespasser may hope for pardon
 I am not known here He is gone
 I might just see the house and garden
 She thinks uncertain and goes on Her mind with agitation seething Downhill she trudges scarcely breathing
 She looks about in puzzled sort
 And enters the deserted court
 The dogs attack her all but biting
 The stranger At her frightened cry
 Out from the house the serf boys fly
 A noisy brood Not without fighting,
 They chase the dogs away alert
 Lest the young lady should be hurt

XVII

The manor house says Tanya shyly,
 "I should most dearly like to see
 At once the children run off spryly
 To ask Anisya for the key
 Anisya surely won't ignore them
 Yes now the door is opened for them
 And Tanya enters Here her prince
 Our hero lived not so long since
 She looks about with heart that flutters
 A cue rests on the table top
 Upon the couch a riding-crop
 She walks ahead The old crone mutters
 The fireplace miss please look at it—
 'Twas here the master used to sit

With the late Lensky almost nightly
He dined here What fine gentlemen!
Please follow me she said politely
Here you will find the master's den
He took his coffee here and rested,
The steward came here when requested
Here mornings, he would read his book
This too was the old master's nook,
Of Sundays putting on his glasses
It was his pleasure quietly
To play a game of cards with me,
Beside the window So life passes
May his soul now be with the blest,
And in the grave his bones have rest!

XIX

Tatyana thrills with pain and pleasure
At everything she gazes on Each object seems a priceless treasure,
Commemorating one who's gone
She looks half soothed and half excited
First at the desk with lamp unlighted
The pile of books no longer read
Then at the rug that decks the bed
The haughty portrait of Lord Byron
The view into the moonlit night
And likes the pallid evening light
That shows a statuette of iron
The arms are crossed—a well known pose—
The hat is cocked the brow morose

XX

In the great silence all a-quiver
 Tavana well-worn, fingers still
 But it is late Above the river
 The crabs, asleep. The wild birds crouch.
 The date is dark and vapor-ridden
 Behind a hill the moon is hidden
 Not pleasant though it is to stare.
 The air young pilgrim must go bare.
 Forgetting children Tava cowers
 The moon, though not without a sign
 And pleading for but a shadow
 She might return, yes, a petting
 Although the horse was empty too
 Would make the den her lair

XVI

She halted at the gateway telling
 The housekeeper a slow good-bye
 And came to the abandoned dwelling
 Yet day before the sun was high
 Into the silent study sitting
 As do all timid thoughts forgotten
 The world without Tavana crept
 And there she staid, and wept and wept.
 The volumes a long list succeeding
 In catching Tavana's eye she took A glance at many a curious book
 And all seemed dull But soon the reading Absorbed the girl and she was thrown Headlong into a world unknown

XXII

Onegin's taste for books had vanished
 Long since but notice if you please
 That there were works he never banished
 From his affection, they were these Lord Byron's tales which well consorted
 With two or three bright backed imported
 Romances upon every page
 Exhibiting the present age
 And modern man's true soul divulging
 A creature arid cold and vain,
 Careless of others joy and pain,
 In endless reverie indulging
 One whose embittered mind finds zest
 In nothing but can never rest

Some pages held a sharp incentive
 To reading where a finger nail
 Had marked the place, and more attentive,
 Tatyana scanned them without fail
 She noted trembling and excited
 What passage what remark delighted Onegin what shrewd line expressed
 A thought in which he acquiesced
 She found the margins most appealing
 The pencil marks he made with care
 Upon the pages everywhere
 Were all unconsciously revealing
 A cross a question mark a word—
 From these the man might be inferred

XXIV

So Tanya bit by bit is learning
The truth, and God be praised can see
At last for whom her heart is yearning
By Fate's imperious decree
A danger to all lovely ladies
Is he from Heaven or from Hades?
Thus strange and sorry character
Angel or fiend as you prefer
What is he? A mere imitation
A Muscovite in Harold's cloak
A wretched ghost a foreign joke
But with a new interpretation
A lexicon of snobbery
And fashion, or a parody?

XXV

Has she the answer to the riddle
And has she found the word? She lets
The time run on and in the middle Of her researches quite forgets
She should go home where guests are waiting
And where indeed of her they're prating
What's to be done? She's not a child
The mother groans It drives me wild
I've married off my younger daughter,
Tatyana should be settled too
But heavens what am I to do
When she can only throw cold water
On every single suitor's hopes?
All day she roams the woods and mopes

XXVI

In love with someone? But who is it?
 Buyanov's hand she has refused,
 And Petushkov's. We had a visit
 From the hussar Pykhtin who used
 As many wiles as I could mention
 To win her—showed her such attention!
 She must accept at last I thought
 But not the whole thing came to naught.
 You'll have to take her to the city—
 To Moscow it's the brides bazaar,
 That's where the eligibles are!
 Not on my income mure's the pity!
 But for a season it will do
 If not my dear, I'll see you through

XXVII

By this delightful counsel guided,
 The mother fell to figuring
 Expenses and therewith decided
 A Moscow winter was the thing
 The news gives Tanya little pleasure
 To let the worldlings take the measure
 Of her demure provincial ways
 Revealing to their haughty gaze
 Her dowdy frocks and to their mercies
 Her countrified simplicity
 Of speech and earn the mockery
 Of Moscow beaux and Moscow Circes!
 Oh horror! Better far to stay Safe in the woodland hid away

XXVIII

She rises as the morning flushes
With rosy light the eastern skies
And off into the fields she rushes
To say with sorrow in her eyes
Farewell you dear and peaceful valleys
Familiar hills familiar alleys
You woodlands where I used to roam
Farewell you friendly skies of home
Kind cheerful nature it is bitter
To leave such quiet haunts as these
For worldly shows and vanities
The crowd the hubbub and the glitter!
And why? What am I striving for?
What does my future hold in store?

XXIX

Her walks are longer she will dally
Beside a stream or on a hill
And find wherever she may sally
Some charming spot to hold her still Among her groves and meadows ranging Her fondness for them never changing
She speaks to them as to old friends
But all too soon the summer ends
And golden autumn is arriving Pale nature shudders tempest tossed
Decked out as for a holocaust
The north wind breathes and bellows driving
The clouds before him—can it be?
Winter the sorceress tis she!

XXX

In many guises she comes flying
 Upon the oak her tufts are hung,
 About the hills and meadows lying,
 Her billowy soft rugs are flung,
 A touch and the sharp cliffs are beveled,
 The river and its banks are leveled,
 Frost glistens Mother Winter's arts
 Are dazzling and rejoice our hearts
 But Tanya does not share our pleasure,
 And heedless of the winter fun,
 She does not sniff the cold or run
 To the low roof to fetch her measure
 Of snow, and wash her face and chest
 She glances at the road distressed

XXXI

The day upon which they intended
 To leave is gone they let time slip Away, while the old sleigh was mended
 And reupholstered for the trip
 The three kibitkas customary
 Are crammed with all that's necessary
 With chairs and chests and casseroles
 With jams and featherbeds and bowls,
 With cocks in cages (these one slaughters
 In town) with pots and pans and gear
 Of all sorts finally you hear
 A noise off in the servants' quarters
 Of loud farewells and crying maids
 And now they bring out eighteen jades,

And while the breakfast is preparing
They hitch them to the master's sleigh
The maids and coachmen vie in swearing
The loads on the kibitkas sway
The bearded old postilion's mounted—
His nag has ribs that might be counted
The servants gather at the gates
For the good byes the turn-out waits
The ladies enter now it's gliding Away the good old sleigh at last Farewell the days of peace are past
You haunts where I might stay in hiding
Farewell! Forever or for years?
Tatyana cannot stop her tears

XXXIII

Enlightenment may be belated
With us but grows apace indeed
Philosophers have calculated
Five centuries are all we need
To have our roads completely mended
And the improvement will be splendid!
For all through Russia there will run
Highways to make the country one
We shall have arched cast iron bridges
And tunnels under water too
And if that's not enough to do
We'll split apart the mountain ridges
And not a station will be known
Without a tavern of its own

XXXIV

Just now our roads are bad for coaches,
Forgotten bridges rot and sink,
And at the stations lice and roaches
Refuse to let you sleep a wink,
There are no inns In a cold cottage
You scarce can get a dish of pottage
The menu hangs there in plain sight,
But just to tease your appetite,
While with his clumsy Russian hammer
The rustic cyclop labors, daft,
At Europe's dainty handicraft,
And blesses, as he halts his clamor,
The ruts and ditches that abound
Wherever there is Russian ground

XXXV

But journeys made in wintry weather
Are far too pleasant to seem long
The highroad, leveled altogether,
Runs smoothly as a hackneyed song
Our dapper coachmen are astounding
Our troikas tireless forward bounding
Mile posts rejoice the idle eye
They look like fenceposts flashing by But Tanya's mother not ignoring
The cost of post horses was glad To use her own and hence they had To rest the rags the halts were boring
And Tanya found the journey bleak
They had to travel for a week

XXXVI

The goal is there before them Blazing
Like fire the gilded crosses rise
Above the domes of Moscow dazing
With splendor unaccustomed eyes
Ah friends how I rejoiced beholding
The terraced scene the view unfolding
Of park and palace dome and spire
With every church in bright attire
How often, sick with separation
My thoughts in exile turned to you
Oh Moscow Moscow! I would view
You in my fond imagination
Moscow those syllables can start
A tumult in the Russian heart!

XXXVII

There the Petrovsky Palace, hiding
Its splendor among ancient trees
Stands grim and grand morosely priding
Itself upon its memories
For here Napoleon elated
With his last victory awaited
In vain a Moscow on her knees
To tender him the Kremlin keys
But it was not capitulation
My Moscow offered Bonaparte—
No feast no gift to warm his heart
But she prepared a conflagration
From here he watched with thoughtful eyes
The fierce flames reddening the skies

XXXVIII

You witness of that fallen glory,
Farewell proud palace! But why wait?
On with the journey and the story!
The columns of the city gate
Gleam white the sleigh more swift than steady,
Bumps down Tverskaya Street already Past sentry boxes now they dash
Past shops and lamp-posts scufs who lash
Their nags huts mansions monasteries,
Parks pharmacies Bohkarans guards,
Fat merchants Cossack's boulevards
Old women boys with cheeks like cherries
Lions on gates with great stone jaws,
And crosses black with flocks of daws

XXXIX XL

So to their destination straightway
They traveled but a dull hour passed
Before they halted at a gateway
Off in a narrow lane at last
They'd come to an old aunt now failing—
For four long years she had been ailing
A halmuck spectacled and worn
Flings wide the door his caftan's torn,
He holds a stocking he was mending
Upon the parlor sofa lies
The princess and her feeble cries
Of welcome are indeed heart rending
The two old women weep embrace
And soon their tongues begin to race.

XLI

Princesse! Pachette! I can't believe it!
 Yes after all these years Aline!
 How long do you remain? Conceive it!
 Sit down mon ange! My dear Cousine!
 It's like a novel life's so chancey
 And this is my Tatyana Fancy!
 Come here my dear Why this seems all
 A dream Cousine, do you recall
 Your Grandson? I can't remember—
 My Grandson? Oh Grandson!
 Where is he? Yes I know the one
 He lives in Moscow Last December
 It was he came to visit me
 His son was married recently

The other But we've time tomorrow,
N'est-ce pas for all we want of talk?
 We'll show off Tanya To my sorrow
 I can't go out I cannot walk—
 My legs betray me But it's tiring
 To travel you must be desiring
 As I am too a little rest
 We'll go together Oh my chest!
 Just think this joy I can't endure it
 Let alone grief I have no strength
 My dear when old age comes at length
 It's misery and who can cure it?
 At that she could no longer hide
 Her weakness and she coughed and cried

Tatyana cannot but be grateful
 To the kind invalid, and yet
 She finds the city cold and hateful
 And does not cease to pine and fret
 Behind the strange bed's silken curtain
 She lies for hours with sleep uncertain,
 And the poor girl is roused betimes
 Each morning by the Moscow chimes,
 The call to early labors dinning
 Out of the window she may stare—
 She will not find her meadows there,
 When the deep shades of night are thinning
 She sees a court she does not know,
 A kitchen and a fence below

XLIV

There is a dinner party daily
 Where Tanya's met with "oh's" and "ah's,"
 Her wistful languor greeted gaily
 By grandmammias and grandpapas
 The relatives—and there are dozens—
 Are cordial to the country cousins,
 And all exclaim delightedly
 And offer hospitality

How Tanya's grown! Why, how long is it
 Since you were christened? Gracious sakes!
 I boxed your ears! I gave you cakes!
 She hears it all at every visit
 In chorus the old ladies cry
 Dear me, the years have just flown by!"

XLV

They do not change depend upon it
But keep to their familiar ways
Princess Yelena wears the bonnet
Of tulle she wore in other days
Lukerya Lvovna still paints thickly
Lubov Petrovna lies as quickly
Ivan Petrovich ne'er was keen
Semyon Petrovich is as mean
Aunt Pelageya still possesses
Monsieur Finemouche, friend of the house,
And the same pom and the same spouse,
The well known clubman who God bless us
Is just as deaf and just as meek
And gorges seven days a week

XLVI

Their daughters, after due embraces,
Examine Tanya silently
From head to foot and Moscow's Graces
Are quite perplexed by such as she
They find her odd—so unaffected
So countrified a bit dejected,
A namby pamby colorless
And thin but pretty more or less
Yet soon they let down their defences
Invite her kiss her press her hands
Fluff up her hair as style commands
And murmur sing song confidences
Relating with romantic art
The girlish secrets of the heart,

XLVII

Reciting all their hopes with candor
Their conquests and their pranks with glee
Embellished with a little slander
The simple talk flows readily
Then they demand in compensation
That she should offer a narration
Of her own heart's shy hopes and fears,
But Tanya, dreaming hardly hears
And does not pay the least attention,
But listens with an absent smile
And guards in silence all the while
The secret she will never mention
The treasure none can ever guess,
The source of tears and happiness

XLVIII

The parlor hums with conversation
In which Tatyana ought to share
She thinks but it is sheer vexation
To hear the vulgar chatter there
Such people with each day grow duller
Their very slander has no color
And every query every tale
Their news their gossip—all are stale
The hours go by they do not waken,
No witty thought occurs no word
Even by accident is heard
Whereby the mind or heart is shaken
Oh, empty world! Oh stupid folk
Who neither crack nor are a joke!

Viewed by the archive youths who cluster
At any gathering or dance
The poor young girl does not pass muster—
They eye our heroine askance
One clownish fellow idly leaning Against a door remarks with meaning
That she's ideal—he must jot
A poem to her on the spot
Once Vyazemsky sat down beside her
When he was calling on an aunt
Where entertainment was but scant
And an old gentleman espied her
Asked who she was—se straight his wig
And gave his neighbor's ribs a dig

But where Melpomene's bold gesture
Displays to the indifferent crowd
The tawdry glitter of her vesture
The while she howls both long and loud
Where Thalia as she's gently napping
Is heedless of the friendly clapping
And where the youthful galaxy
Admires alone Terpsichore
(As was the case upon my honor
In our time too in days of old)
The proud lorgnettes the ladies hold
Were in no instance trained upon her
Nor from the loge and the parterre
The eyeglass of the connoisseur

LI

They take her to the Club for dances
 The rooms are thronged and hot and gay
 The blare the lights, the shining glances,
 The couples as they whirl away
 The lovely ladies filmy dresses,
 The balcony where such a press is
 The young and hopeful brides to-be,
 Confound the senses suddenly
 Here dandies now in the ascendant
 Show off their impudence, their vests,
 Their monocles that rake the guests
 And here hussars on leave resplendent
 And thunderous flock eagerly
 They come, they conquer and they flee.

LII

The stars of night are fair and many
 The Moscow belles are many too
 Yet brighter shines the moon than any
 Of her companions in the blue
 But she in whom my thoughts are rooted
 Before whom my bold lyre is muted
 Mid maids and matrons seems to glide
 Like to the moon in lonely pride
 How heavenly as she advances
 Her motion in pure splendor dressed!
 What languor fills her lovely breast!
 What languor in her magic glances!
 But now enough have done for you
 Have paid to folly what's her due.

LIII

They waltz they bow they curtsy flitting
About a noisy laughing host
While unobserved Tatyana's sitting Between two aunts beside a post
And stares unseeing in no hurry
To join the hateful worldly flurry
She stifles here her heart is sore,
And turns to what is hers no more
The country life the rustic hovels
The lonely thicket where a stream
Is all abubble and a gleam
Her flower her romantic novels
And most, the linden shaded ways
Where he had met her ravished gaze.

Thus far away her thoughts are flying
The world the ball are both forgot
When a great general spying
The girl stands rooted to the spot.
The aunts of one thing only thinking
Each to the other slyly winking
Together nudge Tatyana and Each whispers from behind her hand
Look quickly to the left But balking
She asks "The left? What's there to see?"
Just look that man he's one of three
In uniform Now he is walking Away his profile may be seen
"Who? That fat general you mean?"

Tatyana's brilliant catch discerning
We think good wishes are the things
But it is time I was returning
To him of whom indeed I sing
And by the way now that I mention
The subject give me your attention
*Of my young friend I sing, and of His whims O hover thou above
My labors—bless them with thy beauty,
Thou epic Muse! Upon my way
Be thou my staff nor let me stray
Enough Though late, I've done my duty,
To classicism doffed my hat
Here's the exordium That's that!*

Chapter Eight

Fare thee well and if for ever Still for ever fare thee well

Byron

I

When a Lyceum lad I flourished
And roamed its gardens at my ease
On Apuleius gladly nourished
While Cicero could scarcely please
When in the springtime I would daily
To watch the swans in some dim valley
And hear above the lake their cries
The Muse first shone before my eyes
My student cell grew bright with treasures
Such as the Muse alone can bring Thither she came to sport and sing
Of youthful pranks and childish pleasures
And of the glorious days of old
Of all the dreams the heart can hold

And the world smiled upon her pressing
On us the favors that men crave
We won good old Derzhavin's blessing
Upon the threshold of his grave

And I, all discipline refusing Took wilful passion for my guide,
My path was what the crowd was choosing,
The lively Muse was at my side
At giddy feasts and wild discussions,
And when, at midnight midcap Russians,
We scared patrols with blatant noise,
She shared our banquets crowned our joys—
Like a Bacchante at the revels
Sang for the guests across the wine
And ardently this Muse of mine
Was wooed by passionate young devils
My flighty friend made quite a stir,
In short, and I was proud of her

But this gay circle I deserted
And fled afar She followed me
How often, by her tales diverted
As I fared onward gloomily
I heard her friendly accents soften
And on Caucasian cliffs how often Like pale Lenore by moonlight she Would gallop side by side with me!
How oft on the dark shores of Tauris
She bade me hear the waters sing
The Nereids low murmuring
The sounding waves eternal chorus
And the deep seas His praise rehearse
Who fathered the vast universe

The feasts where wealth and wit were squandered
The dazzling capital forgot—
To sad Moldavia she wandered
And in that far and savage spot
Among the tents of nomads moving Full soon my errant Muse was proving As wild as they forsook her songs
For the wild steppes barbaric tongues
The language of the gods rejected
Then all is changed For lo! she veers,
And as a rural miss appears
Within my garden unexpected
There, wistful-eyed behold her stand,
With a French volume in her hand

VI

And now for the first time I'm bringing My Muse to a superb soiree
And jealous fears my heart are stinging
As I her rustic charms survey
Past thick ranked guests aristocratic,
Renowned resplendent diplomatic Fine ladies military fops
She glides and now serenely stops,
And seated eagerly is eyeing
The glitter of the noisy press
The flash of wit the flouncing dress,
The gallants for their hostess vying
The ladies each a picture when Framed somberly by gentlemen

She likes the talk of haughty sages
Pursued with so much elegance,
And the assorted ranks and ages
And pride that ever looks askance
But in a corner who is standing,
The throng with a mute eye commanding?
He seems indeed an alien here
To whom these faces all appear
But tiresome ghosts Can we unmask him?
And does his somber aspect mean
Offended vanity or spleen?
Why is he here? Who is he? Taste him!
Can it be Eugene? Truly? Aye!
When did he get here, by the bye?

VIII

Has he grown tame at last and mellow?
Or does he follow his old bent
And as of yore play the odd fellow?
Pray whom now does he represent?
Would he be Melmoth or Childe Harold Or as a Quaker go appareled,
A bigot seem—a patriot—
A cosmopolitan—or what?
To a new pose will he be goaded
Or in the end will he just be A decent chap—like you and me?
I say give up a style outmoded
It is time he ceased to be a show
“Ah, then you know him? Yes, and no

IX

"Then why upbraid him thus severely?
 Is it because we like to sit Upon the judgment seat or merely Because rash ardor and quick wit
 Are found absurd or else offensive
 By those whose parts are not extensive?
 Is it because intelligence
 Loves elbow room and thrusts us hence?
 Or is stupidity malicious—
 And trifles of importance to Important folk and is it true
 That only mediocrity
 Befits and pleases you and me?

Blessed is he who could be merry
 And young in youth, blessed is he Who ripened like good port or sherry,
 As years went by, and readily
 Grew worldly wise as life grew chilly,
 Gave up his dreams as wild and silly,
 At twenty to the fashion bred
 At thirty profitably wed
 Quite free of all his debts at fifty Obtaining with himself to thank
 First glory, and then wealth and rank
 All in good time, serene and thrifty—
 Of whom twas said throughout his span X is an admirable man

XI

But oh, how deeply we must rue it,
That youth was given us in vain
That we were hourly faithless to it
And that it cheated us again,
That our bright pristine hopes grew battered,
Our freshest dreams grew sear and scattered
Like leaves that in wet autumn stray
Wind tossed and all too soon decay
It's maddening to see before you
A row of dinners dull and sure,
Find life a function to endure
Go with the solemn folk who bore you,
For all their views and passions not,
At heart, giving a single jot.

The gossips ever are malicious
And it is very hard to bear
When they proclaim you odd or vicious,
Dub you a rogue which is unfair
Or else my demon—condemnation
Enough to kill a reputation
Onegin (I return to him)
Having to satisfy a whim
Dispatched his friend, and had his pleasure,
And with no aim on which to fix
Having attained to twenty six—
Blase grown tired of empty leisure
Without affairs, or rank, or wife,
Found nothing fit to fill his life

XIII

Thus he grew restless and decided
 That he must have a change of scene
 (A plaguë wish by which are guided The few who relish toil and teen)
 He left his rustics to their tillage
 Abandoning his pleasant village
 The fields and forests solitude
 Where still the bloody ghost pursued
 And started on his aimless cruising
 By one emotion only stirred
 Till travel as you'll have inferred
 Ceased like all else to be amusing
 So he returned took Chatzky's cue,
 And forthwith to a ball he flew

And now the guests, exchanging glances,
And whispering make quite a stir
 A lady down the room advances
A haughty general after her
She is not hurried, is not chilly
Nor full of idle chat and silly
She lacks the look of snobbishness,
The cold pretensions to success
The little tricks that are affected
By ladies in society
Hers is a still simplicity
 She seems the image quite perfected
Of comme il faut—Shishikoy, berate
 Me if you must—I can't translate

XV

The ladies all pressed closer to her,
Old women smiled as she went by,
Men while they did not dare pursue her,
Bowed lower sought to catch her eye
Young girls in passing hushed their chatte,
The general since such tributes flatter
An escort much puffed out his chest
And raised his nose above the rest
She was no beauty that were fiction
To utter yet she d not a trace
From head to foot in form or face,
Of what in fashionable diction
And in high London circles they Term vulgar To my great dismay,

XVI

Although I find it so expressive,
The word is one I can't translate
Its vogue—since we are not progressive
And the word's new—should not be great.
For epigrams it would be splendid
But here's our lady unattended
All nonchalance and charm and grace
She at a table took her place
Beside that most superb of creatures
Fair Nina Voronskaya who Presents to the Neva a view
Of Cleopatra, but whose features
However dazzling to the sight
Cannot eclipse her neighbor's quite

Can it indeed thinks Eugene can it
 Be she It is But no And yet
 To come as from another planet
 From that dull hole And his lorgnette
 Repeatedly and almost grimly ✓
 Is trained on her whose features dimly
 Remind him of a face forgot
 Forgive me Prince but can you not Say who it is that now the Spanish
 Ambassador is speaking to?
 She's wearing raspberry Yes you
 Have been away! Before you vanish
 Again you'll meet her, pon my life!
 But tell me who she is My wife

XVIII

Well that is news—couldn't be better!
 You're married long? Two years To whom?
 A Larina Tanya? You've met her?
 I am their neighbor Come resume
 Your friendship At this invitation
 The prince's comrade and relation
 Now met his spouse The princess gazed
 At him And if she was amazed
 And if the sudden sight dismayed her
 And if her soul was deeply stirred
 No look no tremor not a word
 In any small degree betrayed her
 Her manner was what it had been Before, her bow was as serene

XIX

Not only did she fail to shiver,
 Turn pale or blush, as one distressed
 Her eyebrows did not even quiver
 Nor yet were her soft lips compressed
 Not all Onegin's observation
 Could show him an approximation
 To Tanya of the days that were
 He wanted to converse with her
 And could not. Now she spoke inquiring
 When he had come, and if of late
 He'd had a glimpse of his estate
 Then with a look that showed her tiring
 Begged that her husband suffer her
 To leave Our Eugene could not stir

XX

Can it be that Tatyana truly
 Whom at the start of our romance
 Quite tete a tete he'd lectured duly (You will recall the circumstance)?
 How noble was the tone he'd taken
 The spot itself was God forsaken
 Can this be she who long since wrote—
 He has it still—a touching note—
 A letter heartfelt, artless candid
 That little girl is it a dream?
 That little girl he did not deem It wrong to scorn when pride commanded—
 Can it be she who only now
 Showed him so cold and calm a brow?

XXI

He quits the rout and meditating
 Drives home and so at last to bed
 Thoughts sad and sweet still agitating
 The sleepless fellow's heart and head
 He wakes to find a note—that s pleasant
 The prince invite him to be present
 At a soiree God! to see her!
 I'll go! And he does not defer
 The polite "yes" that is behooving
 Is he bewitched? ~~It's~~ very droll
 By what is his cold torpid soul
 Now stirred? Is it vexation moving
 The man? Or vanity forsooth?
 Or love, the grave concern of youth?

XXII

He counts the slow hours vainly trying
 To hurry them he cannot wait
 The clock strikes ten he's off he's flying
 And suddenly he's at the gate
 He goes in to the princess quaking
 Tatyana is alone but making
 An effort to converse with her
 He finds that no remarks occur
 To him and thereby sadly daunted
 Onegin fumbles as he seeks To answer when the lady speaks
 By one persistent thought he's haunted
 He does not cease his stubborn stare
 She sits with an untroubled air

XXIII

The husband enters the appalling
 Bleak tete à tete concludes, he cheers
 His friend Onegin by recalling
 The pranks and jokes of former years
 The guests, arriving hear their laughter
 The talk is seasoned well thereafter
 With the coarse salt of malice, while Light nothings spoken without guile
 And without foolish affectation
 Give way in turn to common sense
 Not deep or learned or intense,
 But reasonable conversation
 That does not frighten anyone
 With a too wanton kind of fun

XXIV

Here the patricians congregated
 Here fashionables would repair
 The dolts that must be tolerated
 The faces one meets everywhere,
 Here, bonneted and wearing roses
 And with the malice time imposes
 Were ladies of a certain age
 And prim young misses looking sage,
 Here an ambassador was weighing Affairs of state and over there
 An ancient with perfumed gray hair
 Was jesting subtly and displaying
 The fine keen wit of yesteryear
 Which nowadays seems somewhat queer

XXV

Here was a man who had a weakness
For epigrams, and was annoyed
By too sweet tea, the ladies' meekness
 The tone the gentlemen employed,
A talked-of novel, rather hazy
A monogram he found too mazy,
The lies that journals perpetrate
The war, the snow fall, and his mate

Here was Hero of the novel
 At poet's heart of songs of love my dream girl you should read these lines & understand my need

And here too was [Prolasov] stunted
 In soul of all the guests the least Admired—in sketching whom you blunted
 Your wicked pencils oh St Priest!
 While in the doorway took his station—
 As perfect as an illustration—
 A ballroom tyrant tightly laced
 Mute motionless and cherub faced
 And there a traveler from a distance
 A brazen fellow starched and proud
 With studied ways amused the crowd
 That scarce had heard of his existence,
 And though he met with no rebuff
 The guests' sly glances were enough.

XXVII

But Eugene's sole preoccupation
Was with Tatyana—not forsooth
The poor shy girl whose adoration
Of him had filled his simple youth,
But the proud princess cold and serious,
The queen aloof, remote, imperious
Of the magnificent Neva
Oh humans like your first mamma
Ancestral Eve you find delightful
Not what you have, but what you see Afar the serpent and the tree
Seduce you though the cost be frightful
Forbidden fruits alone enuce—
Without them, there's no paradise.

XXVIII

How changed Tatyana is! How truly
She knows her role! With none to thank—Tutored by her own wit—she duly
Bears the proud burden of her rank!
Who in this cool majestic woman
The ballroom's ruler scarcely human,
Would dare to seek that gentle girl?
And he had set her heart awhirl
When nights were dark and she, forsaken
By Morpheus her dark eyes would rest
Upon the moon and her young breast
By virginal desires was shaken
Then in a dream that naught could dim
She'd walk life's humble road with him.

XXIX

To  love all ages owe submission
 To youthful hearts its tempests bring
 The very boon they would petition
 As fields are blest by storms of spring
 The rain of passion is not cruel,
 But bears refreshment and renewal—
 There is a quickening at the root
 That bodes full flowers and honeyed fruit.
 But at the late and sterile season
 At the sad turning of the years,
 The tread of passion augurs tears
 Thus autumn gusts deal death and treason
 And turn the meadow to a marsh
 And leave the forests gaunt and harsh

XXX

Alas our poor Onegin's smitten
 Tatyana fills his every thought
 His heart is by such anguish bitten
 As only passion can have wrought
 He does not heed the mind's reproaches,
 But rain or shine, each day his coach is Before her door, he waits for her
 No shadow could be faithfuller
 He knows delight when he's adjusting
 The boa on her shoulders, and When his hot fingers touch her hand
 Or when through liveried throngs he's thrusting
 A way for her he's happy if He may pick up her handkerchief

XXXI

She does not heed, and sore it grieves him
 To note how little she is stirred,
 With perfect freedom she receives him,
 When guests are there, she says a word
 Or bows to him—a cold convention
 At times she pays him no attention
 She has no trace of coquetry—
 It's frowned on in society
 But though Onegin's peace forsake him
 And his cheek pale she does not see
 Or does not care and all agree
 Consumption yet may overtake him
 He's sent to doctors the Neva's
 Best leeches send him to the spas

XXXII

But he refuses he's preparing
 To meet his father's speedily
 Taryana shows no sign of caring
 (Such is the sex, you will agree), ? yes
 And he reluctant o surrender
 Still clings to hope though it be slender,
 And far too wretched to be meek
 He pens with trembling hand and weak,
 A missive eloquent of passion
 He did not value letters much
 And rightly but his pain was such
 That write he must and in this fashion—
 Perhaps 'twill please you if I quote
 The very words Onegin wrote

Onegin's Letter to Tatyana

*All is foreseen when I confess
 My mournful secret you will shun me
 And the grave eyes that have undone me
 Will look with scorn on my distress!
 Indeed what can I hope for after You know the truth? What is the use
 Of speech? For what malicious laughter
 Do I thus give you an excuse?*

*We met by chance I though perceiving
 Affection's spark in you believing
 Myself mistaken did not dare
 To let the tender habit seize me
 Although my freedom did not please me
 The loss of it I could not bear
 And one thing more put us asunder—
 Poor Lensky fell that luckless day
 From all the heart holds dear my blunder
 Forced me to tear my heart away
 An alien roving unrestricted
 I took this peace this liberty
 For happiness Good God! I see How justly now I am afflicted*

*No to be with you constantly
 To follow you with deep devotion
 And with enamored eyes to see
 Each smile of yours, each glance each motion
 To listen to you late and soon
 To know you spirit tuned to spirit
 In torment at your feet to swoon—
 Were bliss and death? I should not fear it!*

XXXI

She does not heed and sore it grieves him
 To note how little she is stirred
 With perfect freedom she receives him,
 When guests are there, she says a word
 Or bows to him—a cold convention
 At times she pays him no attention,
 She has no trace of coquetry—
 It's frowned on in society
 But though Onegin's peace forsake him
 And his cheek pale she does not see
 Or does not care and all agree
 Consumption yet may overtake him
 He's sent to doctors the Nevas
 Best leeches send him to the spas

XXXII

But he refuses he's preparing
 To meet his father's speedy
 Tatyana shows no sign of caring
 (Such is the sex, you will agree) ? yes
 And he reluctant o surrender
 Still clings to hope though it be slender
 And far too wretched to be meek
 He pens, with trembling hand and weak,
 A missive eloquent of passion
 He did not value letters much
 And rightly but his pain was such
 That write he must and in this fashion—
 Perhaps twill please you if I quote
 The very words Onegin wrote

XXXIII

There is no answer to his letter
A second and a third he sends Alas these missives fare no better
Then at a party he attends
He comes upon her as he enters
How firmly her attention centers
On all but him! She never sees Onegin but she seems to freeze
As he comes near it's no illusion
Upon her wrath her lips are sealed
Onegin watches her congealed
Where is compassion where confusion?
Is there a sign of tears? No trace!
Mute anger only marks her face

XXXIV

Yes and the fear of the impression
The world would gain if it should learn
About her early indiscretion
No more my Eugene could discern
All hope is gone! He leaves and curses
His madness—and again immerses
Himself so deep in it that he Once more forsakes society
Now in his study he bethought him
Of days long past when he had been A giddy fop and cruel spleen
Had chased him and had quickly caught him
And locked him in a corner where
The lonely gloom was hard to bear

XXXV

Again a book was his sole crony—
He read at will Gibbon Rousseau
Chamfort and Herder and Manzoni,
Madame de Staël Bichat, Tissot
Devoured Stendhal the arrant skeptic,
And Fontenelle acute eupeptic
And Russians too he would peruse
He was not one to pick and choose
He read miscellany and journal
The magazines that like to scold
Us all and where I now am told
That my performance is infernal
Though once they praised my magic pen
E sempre bene gentlemen

XXXVI

What of it? Though his eyes were busy,
His mind was ever far away
With whirling thoughts his soul grew dizzy,
And dreams and musings far from gay
The page he read could scarcely bore him
Because between the lines before him
Another set of lines transpired
Of which Onegin never tired
These were the secret fond traditions
Of intimacies of the past,
And rootless dreams that could not last
Vague threats predictions and suspicions
A fairy tale that lasts the night
Or letters that a girl might write

And as he reads both thought and feeling
Are lulled to sleep and readily Imagination is unreeling
Its parts colored pageantry
The first clear picture is disclosing
A youth who on the snow seems dozing
As Eugene stares his heart is chilled
To hear a voice cry Well? He's killed
He sees forgotten foes malicious
Detractors cowardly and vile
And cruel traitresses who smile
And old companions dull and vicious
A country house he next may see—
She's at the window—always she!

XXXVIII

Thus sunk in reveries he nearly Went raving mad or worse became A poet—this were paying dearly
For dreams and would have been a shame
But by some influence despotic
Call it magnetic or hypnotic
My brainless pupil almost learned
The way a Russian verse is turned He looked the poet when he'd let a Long evening pass while he would sit Beside the fire and hum to it
Idol mio or Benedetta
Until the flames blazed up anew
Fed by his slipper or review

The days speed by, before you know it
 New warmth has melted winter's chain
 But he has not become a poet,
 He did not die or go insane
 And now, at spring's bright invitation
 He quits his place of hibernation—
 Close as a marmot would require—
 The double windows the snug fire,
 And one fine morning finds him flying
 Past the Neva in a swift sigh,
 On the streaked ice the sunbeams play,
 Upon the streets the snow is lying
 By thaw and grimy steps defaced
 But whither in such anxious haste

XL

Does Eugene drive? Yes, I suspected
 You knew the answer—as you say
 This same odd fellow uncorrected
 To his Tatyana makes his way
 Looking too corpse-like to be nobby,
 He walks into the empty lobby
 Each room he finds unoccupied
 Here is a door—he flings it wide
 And halts in sudden deep confusion,
 What sight thus fills him with dismay?
The princess pale, in negligé
Pores o'er a letter, in seclusion
Her cheeks rests on her hand and she Is weeping, weeping quietly

XLI

Her voiceless grief was past disguising
 In that swift moment one could see
 The former Tanya recognizing Her in the princess readily
 As Eugene by regrets distracted
 Fell at her feet his heart contracted
 She shuddered mute her lovely eyes
 Betrayed no anger no surprise
 As she surveyed him — His dejected
 And healthless look, his dumb remorse—
 These spoke to her with silent force
 And in her soul was resurrected
 The simple girl whose dreams whose ways,
 Whose heart belonged to other days,

XLII

She does not raise him leaves him kneeling
 Nor from his greedy lips withdraws —
 Her passive hands her pain concealing
 She gazes at him without pause
 What are her reveries unspoken?
 The silence at long last is broken
 As she says gently Rise, have done
 I must say candid words or none
 Onegin need I ask you whether You still retain the memory
 Of that lost hour beneath the tree
 When destiny brought us together?
 You lectured me I listened, meek,
 Today it is my turn to speak

XLIII

Then I was younger maybe better,
~~Once, and I loved you, well?~~
How did you take my girlish letter?
Your heart responded how? Pray, tell!
Most harshly there was no disguising
Your scorn You did not find surprising
The plain girl's love? Why even now,
I freeze—good God!—recalling how You came and lectured me so coldly—
Your look that made my spirit sink!
But for that sermon do not think
I blame you For you acted boldly
Indeed you played a noble role
I thank you from my inmost soul

XLIV

"Then far from Moscow's noise and glitter,
Off in the wilds—is it not true?—
You did not like me That was bitter,
But worse what now you choose to do!
Why do you pay me these attentions?
Because society's conventions
Deferring to my wealth and rank
Have given me prestige? Be frank!
Because my husband's decoration
A soldier's, wins us friends at Court,
And all would relish the report
That I had stained my reputation—
'Twould give you in society
A pleasant notoriety?

XLV

I cannot help it I am weeping
 If you recall your Tanya still One thought I would that you were keeping
 In mind that if I had my will
 I would prefer your harsh cold fashion
 Of speech to this insulting passion
 To these long letters and these tears
 My childish dreams my tender years
 Aroused your pity then You're kneeling
 Here at my feet But dare you say
 In truth what brought you here today?
 What petty thought? What trivial feeling?
 Can you so generous so keen
 Be ruled by what is small and mean?

XLVI

To me Onegin all these splendors
 The tinsel of unwelcome days
 The homage that the gay world tenders,
 My handsome house and my sources—
 To me all this is naught This minute
 I'd give my house and all that's in it,
 This giddy play in fancy dress
 For a few books a wilderness
 Of flowers for our modest dwelling
 The scene where first I saw your face
 Onegin that familiar place
 And for the simple churchyard telling
 Its tale of humble lives where now
 My poor nurse sleeps beneath the bough

XLVII

"And happiness before it glided
 Away forever, was so near!
 But now my fate is quite decided
 I was in too much haste, I fear,
 My mother coaxed and wept the sequel
 You know besides, all lots were equal
 To hapless Tanya Well and so
 I married Now, I beg you go
 I know your heart I need not tremble,
 Because your honor and your pride
 Must in this matter be your guide
 I love you (why should I dissemble?)
 But I became another's wife
 I shall be true to him through life

XLVIII

She went Onegin stood forsaken
 Stood thunderstruck He could not stir
 By what a storm his heart was shaken
 What pride, what grief what thoughts of her!
 But are those stirrups he is hearing?
 Tatyana's husband is appearing At this unlucky moment we Must leave my hero ruefully
 For a long time indeed forever
 Together we have traveled far Congratulations! Now we are Ashore at last and our endeavor
 Accomplished in the end Three cheers!
You'll grant it's time to part my dears

XLIX

Whoever you may be my reader,
Ally or enemy attend
The words of this most earnest pleader
Pray say farewell as to a friend
Whatever in these careless stanzas
You seek be it extravaganzas
Of memory or welcome rest
A living picture or a jest
Or merely some mistakes in grammar
God grant you find some trifle here
To earn a smile, a dream a tear
Or rouse a journalistic clamo
And now, since I've no more to tell,
I take my leave of you—farewell

You too farewell, my curious neighbor,
And you my fair ideal too
And you, small fruit of eager labor
My little book With you I knew
The truest source of inspiration
The world's oblivious animation
And talk that brightens friendship's ways
How many swiftly flitting days
Have passed since in a hazy vision
I first saw young Tatyana glide
With her Onegin at her side—
Ere yet the crystal with precision
Had shown to my enchanted glance
The vista of a free romance!

LI

But those good friends who were insistent
That the first strophes should be read
To them alas, some now are distant,
Some are no more, as Saadi said
Onegin's portrait has been finished,
But lacking them the joys diminished,
And she—she who for Tanya posed
How many chapters Fate has closed!
Blessed is he who leaves the glory
Of life's gay feast ere time is up
Who does not drain the brimming cup,
Nor read the ending of the story,
But drops it without more ado,
As my Onegin, I drop you

NOTES

PUSHKIN provided his text with a number of notes only some of which it seemed necessary to reproduce here. To assist the foreign reader several others have been added by the editor.

Dedication addressed to Pyotr Alexandrovich Pletnyov

Chapter I

STANZA II LINE 5 Ruslan and Ludmila hero and heroine of Pushkin's first narrative poem

LINE 14 Written during the author's Southern exile

STANZA IX In preparing the text for the press Pushkin occasionally omitted one or more stanzas or left one unfinished indicating the gap either by dots or by giving merely the number of the stanza. Whatever moved him to make these omissions and fear of censorship seems to have been a minor factor he did not go to the trouble of re-numbering the stanzas. He may have wished thus to tease the reader's imagination.

STANZA XV LINE 13 Breguet a repeater which took its name from a famous watchmaker of the period

STANZA XVI LINE 5 Talon a well known restaurateur

LINE 6 Havenin the name of this friend of Pushkin's did not figure in the early editions of the text, but is found in the manuscript

LINE 8 There was an exceptionally fine vintage in 1811 a year which was also marked by the appearance of a comet

STANZA XVIII Konvizen and Knyazhinin were eighteenth-century playwrights the first a satirist of a liberal temper the second having the reputation of the Russian Racine Semyonova an actress who played Shakespearean roles and acted in the tragedies written by Ozerov a dramatist who belonged to the generation that preceded Pushkin's Katenin a friend of Pushkin's translated French tragedies while Shakhovskoy was a prolific author of comedies both men were somewhat older than Pushkin Didelot was a French choreographer established in Russia

STANZA XX LINE 8 Istomina a celebrated ballerina she danced in a ballet arranged by Didelot based on Pushkin's poem The Caucasian Prisoner

STANZA XXIV LINE 12 To this passage Pushkin attached a note in which after quoting some relevant lines from Rousseau's Confessions he wrote Grimm was in advance of his age Nowadays throughout enlightened Europe nails are cleaned with a special little brush

STANZA XXV LINE 5 Chadayev (Chaadayev), the name of another friend of Pushkin's which also figures only in the manuscript the Russian leau Prummel the Russian Ambassador to France is supposed to have said that Chadayev should be exhibited in every capital so as to show the Europeans un russe parfaitement comme il faut

STANZA XLII This entire ironic stanza is nothing but subtle praise of our fair compatriots Thus Boileau in the guise of reproach lauds Louis XIV Our ladies combine enlightenment with amiability and strict moral purity with that Oriental charm which so captivated Mme de Staël

STANZA XLVIII LINE 3 The bard Muravyov

STANZA XLIX LINE 7 The reference is to Byron

STANZA L. LINE 3 The beach written at Odessa on the Black Sea when the author was in quasi-exile

LINE 10 On his mother's side the author is of African origin His great grandfather Abram Petrovich Annibal at the age of eight was kidnapped from the shores of Africa and taken to Constantinople The Russian envoy rescued him and sent him as a gift to Peter the Great who had him baptized at Wilno His brother went to Constantinople and afterwards to St Petersburg offering a ransom for him but Peter I did not agree to return his godson Till a very advanced age Annibal remembered Africa his father's luxurious life his nineteen brothers He was himself the youngest boy he remembered how they would be brought to their father their hands tied behind their backs while he alone was free swimming where the fountains of the paternal home were playing he also remembered his favorite sister Lagan who at a distance swam after the ship in which he was being carried off

At the age of eighteen Annibal was sent by the Czar to France where he began his service in the Regent's army he returned to Russia with a split head and the rank of lieutenant in the French army From then on he never left the Emperor's side In Anna's reign Annibal who had incurred Buren's personal enmity was transferred to Siberia under a specious pretext Worned by the lack of companionship and the inclemency of the climate he returned to Peter burg without leave and went straight to his friend Munnich Munnich was amazed and advised him to go into hiding immediately Annibal retired to his estates where he lived through out the remaining years of Anna's reign nominally considered to be serving in Siberia Empress Elizabeth on ascending the throne showered him with favors He retired from service with the rank of General-in-Chief and died in Catherine's reign at the age of ninety two (In time we expect to publish a complete biography of him)

In Russia where for lack of historical memoirs the remembrance of remarkable men soon vanishes Annibal's curious life is known only from stories preserved by the family

His son Lieutenant General I. A. Annibal was unquestionably among the most distinguished men of the age of Catherine (he died in 1800)

Folk Tales

THE TALE OF THE POPE AND OF HIS WORKMAN BALDA¹

Porridge head

Was a pope, who is dead
 He went out a shopping one day
 To look for some wares on the way
 And he came on Balda who was there
 Who was going he knew not where
 And who said Why so early abroad old sire?
 And what dost require?
 He replied For a workman I look
 To be stableman carpenter cook
 But where to procure
 Such a servant?—a cheap one be sure!
 Says Balda I will come as thy servant
 I'll be spendid and punctual and fervent
 And my pay for the year is—three raps on thy head
 Only give me boiled wheat when I'm fed
 Then he pondered that pope
 Scratched his poll put his hope in his luck in the Russian Perhaps
 There are raps he bethought him and raps
 And he said to Balda Let it be so
 There is profit for thee and for me so
 Go and live in my yard
 And see that thou work for me numbly and hard

And he lives with the pope does Balda
And he sleeps on straw pallet but ah!
He gobbles like four men
Yet he labors like seven or more men
The sun is not up but the work simply races
The strip is all ploughed, and the nag in the traces,
All is bought and prepared and the stove is well heated
And Balda bakes the egg and he shells it—they eat it,
And the popess heaps praise on Balda
And the daughter just pines for Balda and is sad
And the little pope calls him papa
And he boils up the gruel, and dandles the lad

But only the pope never blesses
Balda with his love and caresses
For he thinks all the while of the reckoning
Time flies, and the hour of repayment is beckoning!
And scarce can he eat, drink or sleep for a lack,
Already he feels on his forehead the crack
So he makes a clean breast to the popess
And he asks where the last rag of hope is Now the woman is keen and quick witted
And for any old trickery fitted
And she says "I have found us my master
A way to escape the disaster
Some impossible job to Balda now allot
And command it be done to the very last jot
So thy forehead will never be punished I say
And thou never shalt pay him but send him away"

Then the heart of the pope is more cheerful
And his looks at Balda are less fearful
And he calls him "Come here to me do
Balda my good workman and true!

Now listen some devils have said
 They will pay me a rent every year till I m dead
 The income is all of the best but arrears
 Have been due from those devils for three mortal years
 So when thou hast stuffed thyself full with the wheat
 Collect from those devils my quit rent, complete

It is idle to jar with the pope so he,
 Balda goes out and sits by the sea
 And there to twisting a rope he sets
 And its further end in the sea he wets
 And an ancient fiend from the sea comes out
 Balda why sneakest thou hereabout?

— I mean with the rope the sea to wrinkle
 And your cursed race to cramp and crinkle
 And the ancient then is grieved in mind
 Oh why, oh why art thou thus unkind?
 — Are ye a king ny? and have not you
 Forgotten the time when the rent was due?
 But now you dogs we shall have our joke
 And you soon will find in your wheel a spoke

— O dear Balda let the sea stop wrinkling
 And all the rent is thine in a twinkling
 I will send thee my grandson—wait awhile "
 — He is easy enough thinks Balda to beguile!

Then the messenger imp from the ocean darted
 And to mew like a famished kitten started

Good morrow Balda my dear muzhik!
 Now tell me what is it this rent you seek?
 We never heard of your rent—that s flat
 Why we devils have never had worries like that!
 Yet take it, no matter!—on this condition,
 For such is the judgment of our commission
 So that no grievance hereafter be—

That each of us run right round the sea
And the quickest shall have the whole of the tax
Our folk meanwhile have made ready their sacks

Then said Balda and he laughed so shily,
Is this my friend thy device so wily?
Shall the likes of thee in rivalry
Contend with the great Balda with me?
Art thou the foe who is sent to face me?
My little brother shall here replace me

Then goes Balda to the nearest copse
Catches two hares that in sack he pops
And returns to the sea once more
To the devilkin by the shore
And he grips one hare by the ear
Thou shalt dance to our own balalaika my dear
Thou devilkin art but young and frail
Dost thou strive with me? thou wilt only fail
It is time and labor lost for thee
Outstrip my brother and thou shalt see!
o one two three and away—now race him!

Then off goes the imp and the hare to chase him
And the imp by the seashore coasted
But the hare to the forest posted
Now the imp has circled the seas about
And he flies in panting his tongue lolls out,
And his snout turns up and he's thoroughly wet,
With his paw he towels away the sweat
And he thinks he has settled Balda But there!
Balda is stroking the brother hare
And repeating My own my deary
Now rest my poor brother for thou art weary!
Then the imp of a heap was struck

And tamely his tail through his legs he stuck,
At the brother hare he glanced askew
Said Wait I will fetch the rent for you
When he got to his grandad Too bad! he said
Balda—the young one—got right ahead

Then the ancient fiend had a notion
But Balda made a noise and commotion
And the ocean was vexed
And the waters were parted next
And the imp shipt out Tis enough muzhik
We will send to you all the rent you seek But listen dost thou behold this stick?
Now choose thou a mark and take thy pick
And the one who the stick can farthest shoot he Shall have the whole of the rent for booty
Why dost thou wait? why standest cowed?
Dost thou fear to sprain thy wrist? — Tis a cloud
Up there I await I will toss thy stick up
Right in the cloud and will start a kick up
For you fiends! And again he had won had Balda
And the terrified imp told his grandpapa
And Balda again made the waters roar
And threatened the fiends with the rope once more
And the imp popped up again Why dost fuss?
If thou wilt thou shalt have all the rent from us

Nay nay says Balda
I think it is my turn ha ha!
Little enemy now the conditions to make
And to set thee a riddle to crack
Let us see what thy strength is Look there
At yonder gray mare
I dare thee to lift her
And half a mile shift her

So carry that mare and the rent is thine
But carry her not and the whole is mine"
And the poor little imp then and there
Crawled under the mare
And there he lay lugging her
And there he lay tugging her,
And he hoisted that mare for two paces but falling
As he took the third, he dropped there sprawling
Then says Balda, What avails to try,
Thou fool of an imp with us to vie?
For thou in thy arms thou couldst not rear her,
But see, between my legs I'll bear her
And he mounted the mare and galloped a mile
And the dust eddied up but the imp meanwhile Ran scared to his grandad and told him then
How Baldà was the winner again

Then the devils no help for it rose and went
In a ring and collected the whole of the rent,
And they loaded a sack
On Balda who made off with a kind of a quack
And the pope when he sees him
Just skips up and flees him
And hides in the rear of his wife
And straddles in fear of his life
But Balda hunts him out on the spot and seel
Hands over the rent and demands his fee

Then the pope poor old chap,
Put his pate up At Rap
Number One up he flew
To the ceiling At Rap Number Two
The pope the poor wretch
Lost the power of speech
And at Rap Number Three he was battered

And the old fellow's wits they were shattered,
But Balda giving judgment reproached him Too keen
Upon cheapness my pope thou has been!

THE TALE OF THE GOLDEN COCKEREL¹

In a realm that shall be nameless
In a country bright and blameless
Lived the mighty Czar Dadon
Second in renown to none
Fierce and bold he would belabor
Without scruple every neighbor
But he fancied as he aged
That enough wars had been waged—
Having earned a rest he took it
But his neighbors would not brook it
And they harassed the old Czar
And they ruthlessly attacked him
And they harried and they hacked him
Therefore lest his realm be lost
He maintained a mighty host
Though his captains were not napping
They not seldom took a rapping
In the south they re fortified—
From the east their foemen ride
Mend the breach as is commanded—
On the shore an army's landed
That has come from oversea
Czar Dadon so vexed was he Was upon the point of weeping
Didn't find it easy sleeping
Never was life bitterer!

The libretto of Rimsky Korsako's opera Cock d'Or is based on this tale

EDITOR'S NOTE

So to the astrologer
 To the wise old eunuch pleading
 For his help an envoy's speeding
 To the eunuch he bows low
 And the mage consents to go
 At Dadon's behest appearing
 At the court a sign most cheering
 In his bag as it befell
 He'd a golden cockerel
 Set this bird the mage directed
 On a pole that's soon erected
 And my golden cockerel
 Will protect thee very well
 When there is no sign of riot
 He will sit serene and quiet
 But if ever there should be Threat of a calamity
 Should there come from any quarter
 Raiders ripe for loot and slaughter
 Then my golden cockerel
 Will arouse his comb will swell
 He will crow and up and doing
 Turn to where the danger's brewing
 In return the mage is told
 He shall have a heap of gold
 And good Czar Dadon instant
 Promises the kind enchanter
 On e thy wish to me is known
 'Twill be granted as my own

On his perch by the Czar's orders
 Sits the cock and guards the borders—
 And when danger starts to peep
 He arises as from sleep
 Crows and ruffles up his feathers
 Turns to where the trouble gathers

Sounds his warning clear and true,
Crying Cock a-doodle-doo!
Slug a bed he still and slumber,
Reign with never care or cumber!
And the neighbors dared not seek Any quarrel but grew meek
Czar Dadon there was no trapping
For they could not catch him napping

Peacefully two years go by
And the cock sits quietly
But one day by noises shaken,
Czar Dadon is forced to waken
Cries a captain Czar and Sire
Rise thy children's need is dire
Trouble comes thy realm to shatter
Gentlemen what is the matter?
Yawns Dadon What do you say?
Who is there? What trouble pray?
Says the captain Fear is growing
For the cockerel is crowing
The whole city's terrified
The Czar looked out and spied
The gold cockerel a working—
Toward the east he kept on jerking Quickly now! Make no delay!
Take to horse men and away!
Toward the east the army's speeding
That the Czar's first-born is leading Now the cockerel is still
And the Czar may sleep his fill

Eight full days go by like magic,
But no news comes glad or tragic
Did they fight or did they not?
Not a word Dadon has got

Hark! Again the cock is crowing—
 A new army must be going
 Forth to battle Czar Dadon
 This time sends his younger son
 To the rescue of his brother
 And this time, just as the other
 The young cock grows still content.
 But again no news is sent
 And again eight days go flitting
 And in fear the folk are sitting
 And once more the cockerel crows,
 And a third host eastward goes Czar Dadon himself is leading Not quite certain of succeeding

They march on by day by night
 And they soon are weary quite.
 Czar Dadon in some vexation
 Vainly seeks an indication
 Of a fight a battle ground
 Or a camp or funeral mound
 Stranger! But as the eighth day's ending
 We find Czar Dadon ascending
 Hilly pathways with his men—
 What does his gaze light on then?
 Twixt two mountain peaks commanding
 Lo! a silken tent is standing
Wondrous silence rules the scene
 And behold in a ravine
 Lies the slaughtered army! Chastened
 By the sight the old Czar hastened
 To the tent Alas Dadon!
 Younger son and elder son
 Lie unhelmed and either brother
 Has his sword stuck in the other
 In the field alackaday

Masterless their coursers stray
On the trampled grass and muddy
On the silken grass now bloody
Czar Dadon howled fearfully
Children children! Woe is me!
Both our falcons have been taken
In the nets! I am forsaken!
All his army howled and moaned
Till the very valleys groaned—
From the shaken mountains darted
Echoes Then the tent flaps parted
Suddenly upon the scene
Stood the young Shamakhan queen!
Bright as dawn with gentle greeting
She acknowledged this first meeting
With the Czar and old Dadon
Like a night bird in the sun
Stood stock still and kept on blinking
At the maid no longer thinking
Of his sons the dead and gone
And she smiled at Czar Dadon—
Bowing took his hand and led him
Straight into her tent and fed him
Royally and then her guest
Tenderly she laid to rest
On a couch with gold brocaded
By her silken curtains shaded Seven days and seven nights
Czar Dadon knew these delights
And of every scruple ridden
Did bewitched what he was bidden.

Long enough he had delayed—
To his army to the maid
Czar Dadon was now declaring
That they must be homeward faring

Faster than Dadon there flies
 Rumor spreading truth and lies
 And the populace have straightway
 Come to meet them at the gateway
 Now behind the coach they run
 Hail the queen and hail Dadon
 And most affable they find him
 Lo! there in the crowd behind him
 Who should follow Czar Dadon
 Hair and beard white as a swan
 And a Moorish hat to top him
 But the mage? There's none to stop him
 Up he comes My greetings Sire
 Says the Czar What's thy desire?
 Pray come closer What's thy mission?
 Czar responded the magician
 We have our accounts to square
 Thou hast sworn thou art aware,
 For the help that I accorded Anything thy realm afforded
 Thou wouldst grant me my desire,
 As thy own fulfilling Sire
 'Tis this maiden I am craving
 The Shamakhan queen Thou art raving!
 Shrieked Dadon forthwith amazed
 While his eyes with anger blazed
 Gracious! Hast thou lost thy senses?
 Who'd have dreamed such consequences
 From the words that once I said!
 Cried the Czar What's in thy head?
 Yes I promised but what of it?
 There are limits, and I'll prove it
 What is any maid to thee?
 How dare thou thus speak to Me?
 Other favors I am able To bestow take from my stable

My best horse or better far
Henceforth rank as a boyar,
Gold I'll give thee willingly—
Half my czardom is for thee
Naught is offered worth desiring,
Said the mage I am requiring But one gift of thee I mean
Namely, the Shamakhan queen
Then the Czar with anger spitting,
Cried The devill Tis not fitting
That I listen to such stuff
Thoult have nothing That's enough!
To thy cost thou hast been sinning—
Reckoned wrong from the beginning
Now be off while thou'rt yet whole!
Take him out, God bless my soul
The enchanter ere they caught him
Would have argued, but bethought him
That with certain mighty folk
Quarreling is not a joke
And there was no word in answer
From the white haired neeromancer
With his sceptre the Czar straight
Rapped the eunuch on his pate
He fell forward life departed
Forthwith the whole city started
Quaking—but the maiden ah!
Hee hee hee! and Ha ha ha!
Feared no sin and was not queasy
Czar Dadon though quite uneasy,
Gave the queen a tender smile
And rode forward in fine style
Suddenly there is a tinkling
Little noise and in a twinkling
While all stood and stared anew
From his perch the cockerel flew

To the royal coach and lighted
On the pate of the affrighted
Czar Dadon and there elate,
Flapped his wings, and pecked the pate,
And soared off and as it flitted
Czar Dadon his carriage quitted Down he fell and groaned at most Once and then gave up the ghost
And the queen no more was seen there
Twas as though she d never been there—
Fairy tales though far from true,
Teach good lads a thing or two

PALACE OF THE KREMLIN

(February 20th 1598)

PRINCES SHUISKY and VOROTYNSKY

VOROTYNSKY To keep the city's peace, that is the task
Entrusted to us twain but we forsooth
Have little need to watch Moscow is empty
For to the Monastery all have flocked
After the patriarch What thinkest thou?
How will this trouble end?

SHUISKY How will it end?
That is not hard to tell A little more
The multitude will groan and wail Boris
Pucker awhile his forehead like a toper
Eying a glass of wine and in the end
Will humbly of his graciousness consent
To take the crown and then—and then will rule us
Just as before

VOROTYNSKY And yet a month has passed
Since cloistered with his sister he forsook
The world's affairs None hitherto hath shaken
His purpose not the patriarch and not His boyar counselors their tears their prayers
He heeds not Deaf is he to Moscow's wail
To the Great Council deaf vainly they urged
The sorrowful nun-queen to consecrate
Boris to sovereignty firm was his sister

Inexorable as he, methinks Boris
 Inspired her with this spirit What if our ruler
 Be sick in very deed of cares of state
 And hath no strength to mount the throne? What sayst thou?

SHUISKY I say that then the blood of the Czarevitch
 Was shed in vain that the poor child Dmitry
 Might just as well be living

VOROTYNSKY Fearful criminal
 I it beyond all doubt Boris contrived
 The young boy's murder?

SHUISKY Who besides? Who else
 Bribed Chepchugov in vain? Who sent in secret
 The brothers Bityagovsky with Kachalov?
 Myself was sent to Uglich, there to probe
 This matter on the spot fresh traces there
 I found the town bore witness to the crime,
 With one accord the burghers all affirmed it
 And with a single word, when I returned
 I could have proved the secret villain's guilt

VOROTYNSKY Why didst thou then not crush him?

SHUISKY At the time
 I do confess his unexpected calmness
 His shamelessness dismayed me Candidly
 He looked me in the eyes he questioned me
 Closely and I repeated to his face
 The foolish tale himself had whispered to me

VOROTYNSKY An ugly business prince

SHUISKY What could I do?
 Declare all to Feodor? But the Czar
 Saw all things with the eyes of Godunov
 Heard all things with the ears of Godunov,

Grant even that I might have fully proved it
 Boris would have denied it there and then
 And I should have been haled away to prison
 And in good time—like mine own uncle—strangled
 Within the silence of some deaf walled dungeon
 I boast not when I say that given occasion,
 No penalty affrights me I am no coward
 But also am no fool and do not choose
 Of my free will to walk into a halter

VOROTYNSKY Monstrous misdeed! Listen I warrant you

Remorse already gnaws the murderer
 Be sure the blood of that same innocent child
 Will hinder his ascension to the throne

SHUISKY He'll not be balked Boris is not so timid!
 What honor for ourselves ay for all Russia!
 A slave of yesterday a Tartar son
 By marriage of Maluta of a hangman
 Himself in soul a hangman he to don
 The crown and cape of Monomakh!—

VOROTYNSKY You are right
 He is of lowly birth we twain can boast
 A nobler lineage

SHUISKY Indeed us so!

VOROTYNSKY Let us remember Shuisky Vorotynsky
 Are let me say born princes

SHUISKY Born princes truly
 And of the blood of Rurik

VOROTYNSKY Listen prince
 Then we, twould seem should have the right to mount
 Feodor's throne

HUISKY

Rather than Godunov

VOROTYNSKY In very truth twould seem so

SHUISKY

And what then?

If still Boris pursue his crafty ways,
 Let us contrive by skilful means to rouse
 The people. Let them turn from Godunov
 Princes they have in plenty of their own
 Let them from out their number choose a czar

VOROTYNSKY We heirs of the Varangians are many,
 But tis no easy thing for us to vie
 With Godunov the people are not wont
 To recognize in us an ancient branch
 Of their old warlike masters long already Have we our appanages forfeited
 Long served but as lieutenants of the czars
 And he hath known by fear and love, and glory
 How to bewitch the people

SHUISKY (Looking through a window) He has dared
 That's all—while we—Enough of this Thou seest Dispersedly the people are returning
 We'll go forthwith and learn what is resolved

THE RED SQUARE

THE PEOPLE

FIRST MAN He is inexorable! He thrust from him
 Prelates boyars and Patriarch in vain
 They prostrated themselves before Boris
 The splendor of the throne out frightens him

SECOND MAN O God who is it will rule over us?
 Oh, woe to us!

THIRD MAN See! the Chief Minister
Is coming out to tell us what the Council
Has now resolved

THE PEOPLE Silence! Silence! He speaks,
The Minister of State Hush hush! Give ear!

SHCHELKALOV (From the Red Porch)
The Council have resolved for the last time
To put to proof the power of supplication
Upon our Ruler's mournful soul At dawn
After a solemn service in the Kremlin
The holy Patriarch will go preceded By sacred banners with the holy ikons
Of Don and of Vladimir with him go
The Council courtiers delegates boyars
And all the pious folk of Moscow all
Will go once more to pray the queen to pity
Our orphaned Moscow and to consecrate
Boris unto the crown Now to your homes
Go ye in peace pray and to Heaven shall rise
The heart's petition of the orthodox
(The crowd disperses)

THE MAIDEN FIELD

FIRST MAN To plead with the Czarina in her cell
Now are they gone Thither have gone Boris
The Patriarch, and the boyars

SECOND MAN What news?

THIRD MAN Still is he obdurate yet there is hope

PEASANT WOMAN (With a child)
Drat you! stop crying or else the bogie man
Will carry you off Drat you drat you! stop crying!

FIRST MAN Can't we slip through behind the fence?

SECOND MAN No chance!

No chance at all! Not only is the nunnery
Crowded the precincts too are crammed with people.
Look what a sight! All Moscow has thronged here.
See! fences roofs and every single story
Of the Cathedral bell tower the church domes,
The crosses too are studded thick with people.

FIRST MAN A goodly sight indeed!

ANOTHER MAN What is that noise?

SECOND MAN Listen! What noise is that?—The people groan

See there! They fall like waves row upon row—
Again—again—Now brother 'tis our turn
Be quick down on your knees!

THE PEOPLE (On their knees groaning and wailing)
Have pity on us

Our father! Oh rule over us! Oh be Father to us and Czar!

FIRST MAN (Sotto voce) Why are they wailing?

SECOND MAN How can we know? It's the boyars' affair
We are small folk

PEASANT WOMAN (With child)

Now what is this? Just when It ought to cry the child is still I'll show you!
Here comes the bogie man! Cry naughty child!
(Throws it on the ground the child screams)
That's right that's right!

FIRST MAN As everyone is crying
Come, brother let us also start to cry

ANOTHER MAN Brother I try my best but can't

FIRST MAN

Nor I

Haven't you got an onion? Let us rub
Our eyes with that

SECOND MAN

No but I'll take some spittle
To wet my eyes What's up there now?

FIRST MAN

Who knows?

THE PEOPLE The crown is his! He is the rightful Czar!
Boris consents at last!—Long live Boris!

THE KREMLIN PALACE

BORIS PATRIARCH BOYARS

BORIS Thou father Patriarch all ye boyars!
My soul lies bare before you ye have seen
With what humility and fear I took
This mighty power upon me Ah! how heavy
The weight of obligation! I succeed
The great Ivans succeed the angel Czar!—
Oh righteous one oh sovereign father look
From Heaven upon the tears of thy true servants Bestow on him whom thou hast loved whom thou
Hast raised so high on earth bestow on him
Thy holy blessing May I rule my people
In glory and like thee be good and righteous!
To you boyars I look for help Serve me
As ye served him what time I shared your labors, Ere I was chosen by the people's will

BOYARS We will not from our plighted oath depart

BORIS Now let us go to kneel before the tombs
Of Russia's great departed rulers Then Bid all our people to a mighty feast,

A witness teaching me the art of letters
 A day will come when some laborious monk
 Will bring to light my zealous nameless toil
 Kindle as I his lamp and from the parchment
 Shal ing the dust of agts will transcribe
 My chronicles that thus posterity
 The bygone fortunes of the orthodox
 Of their own land may learn will mention make
 Of their great czars their labors glory goodness—
 And humbly for their sins their evil deeds
 Implore the Saviour's mercy—In old age
 I live anew the past unrolls before me—
 Did it in years long vanished sweep along
 Full of events and troubled like the deep?
 Now it is hushed and tranquil Few the faces
 Which memory hath saved for me and few
 The words which have come down to me—the rest
 Have perished never to return—But day
 Draws near the lamp burns low one record more
 The last (He writes)

GRIGORY (Waking) The selfsame dream! Is t possible?

For the third time! Accursed dream! And ever Before the lamp sits the old man and writes—
 And not all night would seem from drowsiness
 Hath closed his eyes I love the peaceful sight
 When his calm soul deep in the past immersed,
 He pens his chronicle Oft have I longed
 To guess what tis he writes of Is t perchance
 The dark dominion of the Tartars? Is it
 Ivan's grim death-dealing the stormy Council
 Of Novgorod? Is it about the glory
 Of our great fatherland?—I ask in vain!
 Not on his lofty brow nor in his looks
 May one perceive his secret thoughts his aspect

Is still the same lowly at once and lofty—
 Like to some Magistrate grown gray in office, Calmly he contemplates alike the just
 And unjust with indifference he notes
 Evil and good and knows nor wrath nor pity

PIMEN Art thou awake?

GRIGORY Pray, honored father, give me
 Thy blessing

PIMEN May God bless thee on this day,
 Yes and for ever after

GRIGORY All night long
 Thou hast been writing and abstained from sleep
 While demon visions have disturbed my peace
 The fiend molested me I dreamed I scaled
 By winding stairs a turret from whose height
 Moscow appeared an anthill where the people
 Seethed in the squares below and pointed at me
 With laughter Shame and terror came upon me—
 And falling headlong I awoke Three times
 I dreamed the selfsame dream Is it not strange?

PIMEN 'Tis the young blood at play humble thyself
 By prayer and fasting and thenceforth thy dreams
 Will all be bright and airy Even now
 If I grown weak for want of sleep should fail
 To make my orisons of wonted length
 My senile sleep is neither calm nor sinless
 My dreams hold riotous feasts or camps of war
 And skirmishes the wild insane diversions
 Of youthful years

GRIGORY How joyfully didst thou
 Live out thy youth! The fortress of Kazan
 Thou foughtst beneath with Shuisky didst repulse
 The Lithuanian host Thou hast seen the court

And splendor of Ivan Ah! happy thou!
 Whilst I from boyhood up a wretched monk
 Was it not given to play the game of war
 To revel at the table of a czar?
 Then like to thee would I in my old age
 Have gladly from the noisy world withdrawn
 To vow myself a dedicated monk
 And in the quiet cloister end my days

PIMEN Complain not brother that the sinful world
 Thou early didst forsake that few temptations
 The All High sent to thee Believe my words
 The glory of the world its luxury
 Woman's seductive love seen from afar
 Enslave our souls Long have I lived have taken Delight in many things but never knew
 True bliss until that season when the Lord
 Guided me to the cloister Think my son
 On the great czars who lofter than they?
 God only Who dares thwart them? None And ye Often the golden crown became to them
 A burden for a cowl they bartered it
 The Czar Ivan sought in monastic toil
 Tranquillity his palace filled erewhile
 With haughty minions grew to all appearance
 A monastery the very cut throats whom He chose for guardsmen became cowed monks
 In shirts of hair the terrible Czar appeared
 A pious abbot Here in this very cell
 (At that time Cyril the much suffering
 A righteous man dwelt in it even me
 God then made comprehend the nothingness
 Of worldly vanities) here I beheld
 Weary of angry thoughts and exclamations
 The Czar among us meditative quiet,
 Here sat the Terrible we motionless

Stood in his presence, while he talked with us
In tranquil tones Thus spake he to the abbot
And to us all My fathers soon will come
The longed for day here shall I stand before you,
Hungering for salvation Nicodemus,
Thou Sergius and Cyril, will accept
My holy vow to you I soon shall come
A man accursed here the clean habit take,
Prostrate, most holy father, at thy feet
So spake the sovereign lord and from his lips
The words flowed sweetly Then he wept and we
With tears prayed God to send His love and peace
Upon his suffering and stormy soul —
What of his son Feodor? On the throne
He sighed for the mute hermit's peaceful life
The royal chamber to a cell of prayer
He turned, wherein the heavy cares of state
Vexed not his holy soul God grew to love
The Czar's humility in his good days
Russia was blest with glory undisturbed,
And in the hour of his decease was wrought
A miracle unheard of at his bedside
Seen by the Czar alone appeared a being Exceeding bright, with whom Feodor spake,
And he addressed him as great Patriarch—
And all around him were possessed with fear,
Musing upon the vision sent from Heaven
Since the bless'd Patriarch was absent from The chamber of the Czar And when he died
The palace was with holy fragrance fill'd
And like the sun his countenance shone forth—
Never again shall we see such a czar—
Oh horrible appalling woe! We have sinned
We have angered God we have chosen for our ruler
A czar's assassin

GRIGORY

Honored father long

Have I desired to ask thee of the death
Of young Dimitry, the Czarevitch thou
H'is said wast then at Uglich

PIMEN

Ay, my son

I well remember God it was who led me
To witness that ill deed that bloody sin
I at that time was sent to distant Uglich
Upon some mission I arrived at night
Next morning at the hour of holy mass,
I heard upon a sudden a bell toll
Twas the alarm bell Then a cry an uproar
Men rushing to the court of the Czarina
Thither I haste and there had flocked already
All Uglich There I see the young Czarevitch
Lies slaughtered the queen mother in a swoon
Bowed over him the nurse in her despair
Wailing and then the maddened people drag
The treacherous nurse away Now there appears
Suddenly in their midst wild pale with rage
That Judas Bityagovsky There's the villain!
The raging mob cries out and in a trice
He is out of sight Straightway the people rushed
At the three fleeing murderers they seized
The hiding miscreants and led them up
To the child's corpse, yet warm when lo! a marvel—
The lifeless little one began to tremble!
Confess! the people thundered and in terror
Beneath the ax the villains did confess—
And named Boris

When this befell how old

Was the poor boy?

Full seven years and now

(Since then ten years have passed—nay more—twelve years)

He would have been of the same age as thou
And would have reigned but God deemed other wise

This is the lamentable tale wherewith
My chronicle doth end, since then I scarce
Have meddled in the world's affairs Good brother
Thou hast acquired the precious art of writing,
To thee I hand my task In hours exempt
From the soul's exercise, do thou record,
And without sophistry, all things whereto
Thou shalt in life be witness war and peace
The sway of kings, the holy miracles
Of saints all prophecies and heavenly omens—
For me 'tis time to rest and quench my lamp—
But hark! the matin bell Bless Lord thy servants!
Hand me my crutch

(Exit)

GRIGORY Boris Boris, before thee
All tremble none dares even to remind thee
Of what befell the hapless child meanwhile
In his dark cell a hermit doth set down
A stern indictment of thee Thou wilt not Escape the judgment even of this world
As thou wilt not escape the doom of God

BESIDE THE MONASTERY WALL*

GRIGORY and a WICKED MONK

GRIGORY Oh what a weariness is our poor life
What misery! Day comes day goes and ever

The scene was omitted by Tushkin from the published text of the play. Here the poet uses a trochaic metre not followed by the "291" 40r

One sees, one hears but the same thing one sees
 Only black cassocks hears only the bell
 Yawning by day you wander wander, nothing
 To do you doze the whole night long till daylight
 The poor monk lies awake and when in sleep
 You lose yourself, black dreams disturb the soul
 Glad that they sound the bell that with a crutch
 They rouse you No I will not suffer it!
 I cannot! I will jump this wall and run!
 The world is great I'll take the open road
 They'll hear of me no more

MONK Truly your life
 Is but a sorry one ye hot blooded
 And wild young monks!

GRIGORY Would that the Khan again
 Assaulted us or Lithuania
 Once more rose up in arms! Good! I would then Cross swords with them! Or what if the Czarevitch Should suddenly arise from out the grave
 Should cry Where are ye children faithful servants?
 Help me against Boris against my murderer!
 Seize my foe bring him to me!

MONK Enough, my friend,
 Of empty talk We cannot raise the dead
 No clearly Fate had something else in store
 For the Czarevitch— But hearken if thy mind
 Is set upon a deed, then do it

GRIGORY What?

MONK If I were young as thou if these gray hairs
 Had not already streaked my beard— Dost take me?

GRIGORY Not I

this learning did not come to him from the Lord God—

PATRIARCH Ah those learned ones! What a thing to say I shall be Czar in Moscow Ah he is a vessel of the devil! However it is of no use even to report this to the Czar, why disquiet the sovereign our father? It will be enough to give information about his flight to Secretary Smirnov or Secretary Yefimiev What heresy I shall be Czar in Moscow!

Catch catch the tool of the devil and let him endure perpetual penance in exile at Solovetsky But indeed—is it not heresy Father Abbot?

ABBOT Heresy holy Patriarch downright heresy

PALACE OF THE CZAR

TWO COURTIER

FIRST COURTIER Where is the sovereign?

SECOND COURTIER In his bed-chamber
Where he is closeted with some magician

FIRST COURTIER Ay that's the kind of intercourse he loves

Magicians sorcerers and fortune tellers

Ever he seeks to dip into the future

Just like some pretty girl Fain would I know

What 'tis that he would learn

SECOND COURTIER Well here he comes Shall we not question him?

FIRST COURTIER How grim he looks!
(Exeunt)

CZAR (Enters) I have attained the highest power Six years

Have I reigned peacefully, but happiness
Dwells not within my soul Even so in youth
We greedily desire the joys of love
But scarce have quelled the hunger of the heart
With momentary pleasure when we grow
Cold weary and oppressed! In vain the wizards Promise me length of days days of dominion
Untroubled and serene—not power not life
Rejoice me I forebode the wrath of Heaven
And woe For me there is no joy I thought
To give my people glory and contentment,
To gain their loyal love by generous gifts
But I have put away that empty hope,
The living power is hateful to the mob—
Only the dead they love We are but fools
When our heart shakes because the people clap
Or cry out fiercely When our land was stricken
By God with famine perishing in torments
The people uttered moan I opened to them
The granaries I scattered gold among them
Found labor for them yet for all my pains
They cursed me! Next a fire consumed their homes,
I built for them new dwellings then forsooth
They blamed me for the fire! Such is the mob,
Such is its judgment! Seek its love indeed!
I thought within my family to find
Solace I thought to make my daughter happy
By wedlock Like a tempest Death took off
Her bridegroom—and at once a stealthy rumor
Pronounced me guilty of my daughter's grief—
Me me the hapless father! Whoso dies
I am the secret murderer of all
Feodor's end I hastened 'twas I poisoned
My sister-queen the nun—twas ever I!

Ah! now I feel it naught can give us peace
 Mid worldly cares nothing save only conscience!
 When clear she triumphs over wickedness
 Over dark slander but if she be found
 To have a single stain then misery!
 With what a deadly sore the soul doth smart
 The heart with venom filled beats like a hammer
 And dins reproach into the buzzing ears
 The head is spinning nausea tortures one
 And bloody boys revolve before the eyes
 And one would flee but refuge there is none!
 Oh pity him whose conscience is unclean!

HOSTESS With what shall I regale you my reverend sirs?

VARLAAM With what God sends little hostess Is there no wine?

HOSTESS As if that were possible my fathers! I will bring it at once (Exit)

MISAIL Why so glum comrade? Here is that ver Lithuanian frontier which thou didst so wish to reach

GRIGORY Until I am in Lithuania I shall not be content

VARLAAM What is it that makes thee so fond of Lith uania? Here are we Father Misail and I, sinner that I am now that we have escaped from the monastery

Nothing matters to us Lithuania, Russia a whistle, a psaltery? It is all one to us if only there is wine.
And here it is!

MISAIL Well said Father Varlaam

HOSTESS (Enters)

There you are my fathers Drink, and may it do you good

MISAIL Thanks my good friend God bless thee (The monks drink VARLAAM trolls a ditty Ah sweet heart sweetheart mine Show me those eyes of thine To GRIGORY) Why dost not join in the song? Why dost not join in the drinking?

GRIGORY I don't wish to

MISAIL Everyone to his liking—

VARLAAM But a tipsy man's in Heaven, Father Misail!
Let us drink a glass to our hostess (Sings Show those eyes of thine) Still Father Misail when I am drinking then I don't like sober men tipsiness is one thing—but pride quite another One who would live as we do is welcome If not—then take thyself off away with thee a clown is no companion for a priest

GRIGORY Drink and keep thy thoughts to thyself Father Varlaam! * I too sometimes know how to speak

They speak in rhymed pro-verb well

VARLAAM But why should I keep my thoughts to my self?

MISAIL Let him alone Father Varlaam

VARLAAM But what sort of a fasting man is he? Of his own accord he attached himself as a companion to us no one knows who he is no one knows whence he come—and yet he gives himself grand airs (Drinks and sings A young monk took orders)

GRIGORY (To HOSTESS) Whither leads this road?

HOSTESS To Lithuania my provider to the Luyov mountains

GRIGORY And is it far to the Luyov moun ains?

HOSTESS Not far, you might get there by evening but for the Czar's frontier guards, and the officers of the watch

GRIGORY What? Guards! What does it mean?

HOSTESS Someone has escaped from Moscow and orders have been given to detain and search everyone

GRIGORY (Aside) Here's a pretty mess!

VARLAAM Hallo comrade! Thou'rt making up to the hostess To be sure thou wantest no vodka but a young woman All right brother all right! Everyone has his own ways and Father Misail and I have only one care—we drink to the bottom we drink turn the glass upside down and knock on the bottom

MISAIL Well said Father Varlaam

GRIGORY (To HOSTESS) Whom do they want? Who escaped from Moscow?

HOSTESS God knows a thief perhaps a robber But here even good folks are plagued now And what will come of it? Nothing They'll not catch a hair of the devil as if there were no other road into Lithuania than the highway! Just turn to the left from here, then through the pinewood follow the footpath as far as the chapel on the Chekansky brook and then straight across the marsh to Khlopino and thence to Zakharievo, and there any child will guide you to the Luyov mountains. The only good of these officers is to plague passers by and rob us poor folk. (A noise is heard) What's that? Ah, there they are, curse them! They are going their rounds.

GRIGORY Hostess! is there another room in the cottage?

HOSTESS No, my dear, I should be glad myself to hide. But they are only pretending to go their rounds but give them wine and bread and Heaven knows what—May they choke, the accursed ones! May—
(Enter OFFICERS)

OFFICERS Good health to you, hostess!

HOSTESS You are very welcome dear guests

AN OFFICER (To another) Ha there's drinking going on here we shall get something here (To the MONKS) Who are you?

VARLAAM We—are God's old men humble monks we are going from village to village, and collecting Christian alms for the monastery

OFFICER (To GRIGORY) And thou?

MISAIL Our comrade

GRIGORY A layman from the suburb I have conducted the old men as far as the frontier from here I am going to my own home

MISAIL So thou hast changed thy mind?

GRIGORY (Sotto voce) Hold thy tongue

OFFICER Hostess bring some more wine and we will drink here a little and talk a little with these old men

SECOND OFFICER (So to soce) Yon lad it appears is poor there's nothing to be got out of him on the other hand the old men—

FIRST OFFICER Be silent we shall come to them presently—Well my fathers how goes it?

VARLAAM Badly son badly! The Christians have now turned stingy they love their money they hide their money They give little to God A great sin has come upon the peoples of the earth All men have become traders and publicans they think of worldly wealth not of the salvation of the soul You walk and walk you beg and beg sometimes in three days begging will not bring you three half pence What a sin! A week goes by another week you look into your bag and there is so little in it that you are ashamed to show yourself at the monastery What are you to do? From very sorrow you drink away what is left a real calamity Ah it is bad! It seems our last days have come—

HOSTESS (Weeps) God pardon and save us!
(During the course of VARLAAM'S speech the FIRST OFFICER was watching MISAIL significantly)

FIRST OFFICER Alexis! hast thou the Czar's edict with thee?

SECOND OFFICER I have it

FIRST OFFICER Hand it over

MISAIL Why art thou staring at me?

FIRST OFFICER This is why from Moscow there has fled a certain wicked heretic—Grishka Otrepyev Hast thou heard this?

MISAIL I have not

OFFICER Not heard it? Very good And the Czar has ordered to catch and hang the fugitive heretic Dost thou know this?

MISAIL I do not

OFFICER (To VARLAAM) Dost know how to read?

VARLAAM In my youth I knew how, but I have forgotten

OFFICER (To MISAIL) And thou?

MISAIL God has not given me wisdom

OFFICER Here's the Czar's edict for thee

MISAIL What do I want it for?

OFFICER It seems to me that this fugitive heretic thief swindler is—thou MISAIL I? Good gracious! What art thou talking of?

OFFICER Stay! Bar the doors We shall soon get at the truth at once

HOSTESS O the cursed tormentors! Even an old man they won't leave in peace!

OFFICER Which of you here can read?

GRIGORY (Comes forward) I can read!

OFFICER Oh indeed! And who taught thee?

GRIGORY Our sacristan

OFFICER (Gives him the card) Read it aloud

GRIGORY (Reads) Grigory of the family of Otrepyev an unworthy monk of the Chudov Monastery has fallen into heresy and instructed by the devil has dared to stir up the holy brotherhood with all manner of temptations and lawlessness And according to information it appears that he the accursed Grishka has fled to the Lithuanian frontier

OFFICER (To MISAIL) How can it be anyone but thou?

GRIGORY And the Czar has commanded to catch him—

OFFICER And to hang!

GRIGORY It does not say here to hang

OFFICER Thou liest What is meant is not always put into writing Read to catch and to hang

GRIGORY And to hang And the years of this thief Grishka (looking at VARLAAM) are more than fifty and he is of medium height he has a bald head a gray beard a fat belly

(All look at VARLAAM)

FIRST OFFICER My lads! Here is Grishka! Hold him! bind him! What a surprise!

VARLAAM (Snatching the paper) Hands off you dogs! What sort of a Grishka am I? What! fifty years old gray beard fat belly! No brother You're too young to play tricks on me I have not read for a long time and I find it hard to make out but I shall manage to make it out as it's a hanging matter (Spells it out) And his age twenty Why brother where does it say fifty?—Do you see—twenty?

SECOND OFFICER Yes I remember, twenty even so it was told us

FIRST OFFICER (To GRIGORY) Then evidently you are a joker brother

(During the reading GRIGORY stands with downcast head and his hand in his bosom)

VARIANTS (Continues) And in stature he is small, his chest is broad one arm is shorter than the other has blue eyes red hair a wart on his cheek another on his forehead Then is it not thou, my friend?

(GRIGORY suddenly draws a dagger all give way before him he dashes through the window)

OFFICERS Hold him! Hold him!

(All run in disorder)

MOSCOW SHUISKY'S HOUSE

SHUISKY MANY GUESTS Supper

SHUISKY More wine! (He rises all rise after him)

Now my dear guests The final jug!

Boy read the prayer

BOY Lord of the heavens Who art Eternally and everywhere accept

The prayer of us Thy servants For our monarch

By Thee appointed for our pious Czar

The autocrat of Christendom we pray

Preserve him in the palace on the field

Of battle on his nightly couch grant to him

Victory over his foes from sea to sea

May he be glorified may all his house

Blossom with health and may its precious branches

Overshadow all the earth to us his slaves

May he as heretofore be generous

Gracious long suffering and may the founts
Of his unfailing wisdom flow for us
Raising the royal cup Lord of the heavens
For this we pray

SHUISKY (Drinks) Long live our mighty sovereign!
Farewell dear guests I thank you that ye scorned not

My bread and salt Good bye and slumber well
(Exeunt GUESTS he conducts them to the door)

Ivanovich, I began to think that we should not succeed in getting any private talk

SHUISKY (To the SERVANTS) You there, why do you stand gaping? Always eavesdropping on the masters! Clear the table and then be off (Exeunt SERVANTS)
What is it Afanasy

Mikhailovich?

PUSHKIN Marvels will never cease!
A messenger from Cracow came to-day
Sent by my nephew, young Gavril Pushkin

SHUISKY Well?

PUSHKIN 'Tis strange news my nephew writes
The son
Of Czar Ivan the Terrible— But stay—
(Goes to the door and examines it)
The royal boy slain by Boris's order—

SHUISKY But these are no new tidings

PUSHKIN Wait a little Dimitry lives

SHUIISKY So that's it! News indeed!
 Dimitry living!—really marvellous!
 And is that all?

PUSHKIN Pray listen to the end,
 Whoever he be, whether he be Dimitry
 Rescued or else some spirit in his shape
 Some daring rogue some insolent pretender,
 In any case Dimitry has appeared

SHUIISKY It cannot be

PUSHKIN Pushkin himself beheld him
 When first he reached the court, and through the ranks
 Of Lithuanian courtiers went straight
 Into the secret chamber of the king

SHUIISKY What kind of man? Whence comes he?

PUSHKIN No one knows
 'Tis known that he was Wisniowiecki's servant
 That to a ghostly father on a bed
 Of sickness he disclosed himself possessed
 Of this strange secret his proud magnate nursed him
 From his sick bed upraised him and straightway
 Took him to Sigismund

SHUIISKY And what say men
 Of this bold fellow?

PUSHKIN They say he is wise
 Affable cunning pleasing to all men
 He has bewitched the fugitives from Moscow,
 The Catholic priests see eye to eye with him
 The king caresses him, and, it is said
 Has promised help

All this is such a medley

That my head whirls Brother beyond all doubt
This man is a pretender but the danger
Is I confess not slight This is grave news!
And if it reach the people then there'll be A mighty tempest

PUSHKIN

Such a storm that hardly

Will Czar Boris contrive to keep the crown
Upon his clever head and losing it
Will get but his deserts! He governs us
As did the Czar Ivan of evil memory
What profits it that public executions
Have ceased that we no longer are impaled
And dripping blood sing hymns to Jesus Christ
That we no more are burnt on public squares
Or that the Czar no longer with his sceptre
Rakes in the coals? Have we any assurance
Of our poor lives? Each day disgrace awaits us
The dungeon or Siberia cowl or fetters
And then in some lost nook at last starvation
Or else the halter Where are the most renowned
Of all our houses where the Sitsky princes
Where are the Shestunovs where the Romanovs
Hope of our fatherland? Imprisoned tortured
In exile Do but wait and a like fate
Will soon be thine Think of it! Here at home
We are beset as if by foreign foes
By treacherous slaves—these spies are ever ready
For base betrayal thieves bribed by the State
We hang upon the word of the first servant
Whom we may choose to punish Then he bethought
him
To bind the peasant to the land he tilled Forbidding change of masters so that thus
The masters too are bound Do not dismiss charming child thou wilt learn to love him thou wilt forget thy prince

XENIA Nay, nurse, I will be true to him even in death
(BORIS enters)

CZAR What Xenia? What my sweet one? In thy girl hood

Already a woe stricken widow ever
Bewailing thy dead bridegroom! Fate forbade me
To be the author of thy bliss Perchance
I angered Heaven it was not mine to compass Thy happiness Innocent one for what Art thou a sufferer? And thou my son
With what art thou employed? What's this?

FEODOR A map
Of all the land of Muscovy, our czardom
From end to end Here you see there is Moscow
There Novgorod there Astrakhan Here lies
The sea here the dense forest tract of Perm
And there Siberia

CZAR And what is this
Which makes a winding pattern here?

FEODOR That is
The Volga

CZAR Very good! Here's the sweet fruit
Of learning One can view as from the clouds
Our whole dominion at a glance its frontiers
Its towns its rivers Study son tis science
That teaches us more swiftly than experience
Our life being so brief Some day and soon
Perchance the lands which thou so cunningly
To-day hast drawn on paper all will come Under thy hand Then study and more clearly

More steadily wilt thou see, son, before thee
The sovereign task

(SEMYON GODUNOV enters)

But there comes Godunov
Bringing reports to me (To XENIA) Go to thy chamber

Dearest farewell my child God comfort thee
(Exit XENIA and NURSE)

What news hast thou for me, Semyon Nikitich?

SEMYON G To-day at dawn the butler of Prince Shuisky
And Pushkin's servant brought me information

CZAR Well?

SEMYON G In the first place Pushkin's man deposed
That yesternorn came to his house from Cracow
A courier who within an hour was sent Without a letter back

CZAR Arrest the courier

SEMYON G Some are already sent to overtake him

CZAR And what of Shuisky?

SEMYON G Last night he entertained
His friends the Buturlins both Miloslavskys
And Saltykov with Pushkin and some others
They parted late Pushkin alone remained Closeted with his host and talked with him
And at some length

CZAR For Shuisky send forthwith

SEMYON G Sire he is here already

CZAR Call him hither
(Exit SEMYON GODUNOV)
Dealings with Lithuania? What means this?

I like not the rebellious race of Pushkins
Nor must I trust in Shuisky whose evasive
But bold and wily—

(Enter SHUISKY)

Prince a word with thee
But thou thyself it seems hast business with me
And I would listen first to thee

SNUISKY Yes sir
It is my duty to convey to thee
Grave news.

GEAR I listen

SHUISE Y (Sotto voce pointing to FEODOR)
But sire—

CZAR The Czarevitch
May learn whate er Prince Shui ky knoweth Speal

SHUISKY My liege from Lithuania there have come Tidings to us—

CZAR Are they not those same tidings
Which yestereve a courier bore to Pushkin?

SHUISEY Nothing is hidden from him!—Sire I thought
Thou knewst not yet this secret

Let not that Trouble thee prince I fain would match thy news
With what I know else we shall never learn
The actual truth

SHUIRY I know this only sure
In Cracow a pretender hath appeared
The king and nobles back him

What say they?

And who is this pretender?

I know not

CZAR But wherein is he dangerous?

SHLISEY

Verily

Thy power my liege is firm by vigilance,
 Grace bounty thou hast won the filial love
 Of all thy slaves but thou thyself dost know
 The mob is thoughtless changeable rebellious
 Credulous lightly given to vain hope,
 Obedient to each momentary impulse
 To truth deaf and indifferent it doth feed
 On fables shameless boldness pleaseth it
 So if this unknown vagabond should cross
 The Lithuanian border, Dimitry's name
 Raised from the grave will gain him a whole crowd
 Of fools

CZAR Dimitry's?—What?—That child's?—Dimitry's?
 Withdraw my son

SHUISKY

He flushed there'll be a storm!

FEODOR Suffer me Sire—

CZAR

Impossible, Czarevitch

Go gol

(Exit FEODOR)

Dimitry's name!

SHUISKY

Then he knew nothing

CZAR Listen take steps this very hour that Russia
 Be fenced by barriers from Lithuania
 That not a single soul pass o'er the border
 That not a hare run o'er to us from Poland
 Nor crow fly here from Cracow Off!

I go

CZAR Stay!—Is it not the truth that this report
Is artfully contrived? Hast ever heard
That dead men have arisen from their graves
To question czars legitimate czars appointed Acclaimed by all the people yea and crowned
By the great Patriarch? Should one not laugh?
Eh? What? Why laugh st thou not thereat?

SHUISKY

I, Sire?

CZAR Hark Prince Vassily when I learned this child
Had been—this child had somehow lost its life
Twas thou I sent to search the matter out
Now by the Cross by God I do adjure thee
Declare to me the truth upon thy conscience
Didst recognize the slaughtered boy or didst
Thou find another? Answer

Sire I swear—

CZAR Nay Shuiskey swear not but reply was it Indeed Dimitry?

SHUISKY

He

CZAR

Consider prince

I promise clemency I will not punish
With vain disgrace a lie that s of the past
But if thou cheat me now then by my own
Son's head I swear—an ill fate shall befall thee
Such punishment that Czar Ivan himself
Shall shudder in his grave with horror of it

SHUISKY In punishment no terror lies the terror
Doth lie in thy disfavor in thy presence
Dare I use cunning? Could I have been so blind
That I then failed to recognize Dimitry?
Three days in the cathedral did I visit

His corpse, escorted thither by all Uglich Around him thirteen bodies lay of those Slain by the people, and in them corruption Already had set in perceptibly
 But lo! the childish face of the Czarevitch
 Was bright and fresh and still as though he slept,
 The deep gash had congealed not nor the lines
 Of his face even altered No my liege
 There is no doubt Dimitry's in his grave

CZAR (Calmly) Enough withdraw

(Exit SHUISKY)

I choke!—let me draw breath!

I felt it all my blood surged to my face
 And heavily receded—So that's why
 For thirteen years together I have dreamed Ever about the murdered child Yes yes—
 'Tis that!—now I perceive But who is he,
 My terrible antagonist? Who is it
 Opposeth me? An empty name a shadow
 Can but a ghost tear from my back the purple
 A hollow sound make beggars of my children?
 This is pure madness! What is there to fear?
 Blow on this phantom—and it is no more
 So I am fast resolved I'll show no sign
 Of fear but let no trifle be ignored
 Ah! heavy art thou crown of Monomakh!

CRACOW HOUSE OF WIŚNIEWSKI

THE PRETENDER AND FATHER CZERNIKOWSKI A JESUIT

PRETENDER. Nay father it will not be hard I know
 The spirit of my people piety
 With them is not extreme their czar's example
 To them is sacred And their tolerance

Makes them indifferent I warrant you
 Before two years my people all and all
 The Northern Church will recognize the power
 Of Peter's Vicar

JESUIT May Saint Ignatius aid thee
 When other times arrive Meanwhile Czarevitch
 Hide in thy soul the seed of heavenly grace
 Religious duty bids us oft dissemble
 Before the impious world the people judge
 Thy words thy deeds God only sees thy motives

PRETENDER Amen Who's there?

(Enter a SERVANT)

Say that we will receive them
(The doors are opened enter a crowd of Russians and Poles)

Comrades! To-morrow we depart from Cracow
 Muszecz with thee for three days in Sambor
 I'll stay I'll know thy hospitable castle
 Both shines in splendid stateliness and glories
 In its young mistress There I hope to see Charming Maryna And ye my friends ye Russians
 And Lithuanians ye who have upraised
 Fraternal banners against a common foe
 Against mine enemy yon crafty villain
 Ye sons of Slavs speedily will I lead
 Your dread battalions to the longed for conflict
 But soft! Methinks among you I descry
 New faces

GAVRILA PUSHKIN They have come to beg for sword
 And service with your Grace

PRETENDER Welcome my lad
 Come hither friends But tell me Pushkin who Is this fine youth?

Prince Kurbsky

PRETENDER (To KURBSKY)

A proud name!

Art kinsman to the hero of Kazan?

KURBSKY His son

PRETENDER

Doth he still live?

KURBSKY

Nay, he is dead

PRETENDER A noble mind! A man of war and counsel

But from the time when he appeared beneath

The ancient town Olgin with Lithuanians,

Hardy avenger of his injuries

Rumor hath held her tongue concerning him

KURBSKY My father passed the remnant of his life

On lands bestowed upon him by Bathory,

There, in Volhynia a peaceful hermit

Sought consolation for himself in learning

But quiet labor did not comfort him

He ne'er forgot the home of his young days

And to the end pined for it

PRETENDER

Hapless chieftain!

How brightly shone the dawn of his resounding

And stormy life! Glad am I, noble knight

That now in thee his blood is reconciled

To his own country Faults of fathers must not

Be called to mind Peace to their graves Approach

Give me thy hand! Is it not strange?—the son

Of Kurbsky to the throne is leading—whom?

Whom but Ivan's own son?—All favors me

People and fate alike—Say who art thou?

A POLE Sobanski A free noble

Praise and honor

Attend thee child of liberty Give him

A third of his full pay beforehand—Who Are these? On them I recognize the garb
Of my own country These are ours

KHRUSHCHOV (Bows low) Yea Sire
Our father we are thralls of thine devoted
And persecuted we have fled from Moscow
Disgraced to thee our czar and for thy sake
Are ready to lay down our lives our corpses
Shall be for thee steps to the royal throne

PRETENDER Take heart, innocent sufferers Only let me Reach Moscow and once there Boris shall settle Some scores with me and you What news of Moscow? *

KHRUSHCHOV As yet all there is quiet But already
The folk have got to know that the Czarevitch
Was saved already everywhere is read
Thy proclamation All are waiting for thee
Not long ago Boris sent two boyars
To meet their death merely because in secret
They drank thy health

PRETENDER O hapless good boyars!
But blood for blood! and woe to Godunov!
What do they say of him?

KHRUSHCHOV He has withdrawn
Into his gloomy palace He is grim
And somber Executions loom ahead
But sickness gnaws him Hardly hath he strength
To drag himself along and—it is thought—
His last hour is already not far off

The passage beginning with the last phrase drawn to the end of the play may yet prove wrong appears only in a manuscript of the of the play

PRETENDER A speedy death I wish him, as becomes A great souled foe to wish If not then woe
 To the miscreant!—And whom doth he intend
 To name as his successor?

KHRUSHCHOV He shows not
 His purposes but it would seem he destines
 Feodor, his young son to be our czar

PRETENDER His reckonings, maybe, will yet prove wrong
 And who art thou?

KARELA A Cossack from the Don
 Sent to thee from the free troops the brave chieftains
 Of both the upper and lower reaches,
 To look upon thy bright and royal eyes,
 And tender thee their homage

PRETENDER Well I knew
 The men of Don I doubted not to see
 The Cossack banners in my ranks We thank Our army of the Don To-day, we know,
 The Cossacks are unjustly persecuted
 Oppressed but if God grant us to ascend
 The throne of our forefathers as of yore
 We will reward our free and faithful Don

POET (Approaches bowing low and taking GRIGORY by the hem of his caftan)
 Great prince illustrious offspring of a king!

PRETENDER What wouldst thou?

POET Condescendingly accept
 This poor fruit of my earnest toil

PRETENDER What see I?
 Verses in Latin! Blest a hundredfold

The tie of sword and lyre the seltsame laurel
 Binds them in friendship I was born beneath
 A northern sky but yet the Latin muse
 To me is a familiar voice I love
 The blossoms of Parnassus I believe
 The prophecies of poets Not in vain
 The ecstasy seethes in their flaming breasts
 The deed is hallowed which is glorified
 Beforehand by the poets! Approach friend
 In memory of me accept this gift

(Gives him a ring)

When fate fulfills for me her covenant
 When I assume the crown of my forefathers
 I hope again to hear the measured tones
 Of thy sweet voice and thy inspired lay
Musa gloriam coronat gloriaque musam
 And so friends till to-morrow fare you well

ALL Forward! Long live Dimitry! Forward forward!
 Long live Dimitry the great prince of Moscow!

CASTLE OF THE GOVERNOR MNISZECH IN SAMBOR *

Maryna's Dressing Room

MARYNA RUZIA (dressing her) SERVING WOMEN

MARYNA (Before a mirror) Now is it ready? Can thou not make haste?

RUZIA I pray you first to make the difficult choice
 What will you wear—the necklace made of pearls—
 The emerald crescent?

This scene was omitted by Pushkin from the published text of the play. Here the blank verse gives the irregular rhythm of lines.

MARYNA

No my diamond crown

RUZIA Splendid! Do you remember that you wore it
 When to the palace you were pleased to go?
 They say that at the ball your gracious highness Shone like the sun, men sighed fair ladies whispered—

'Twas then that for the first time young Chodkiewicz
 Beheld you he who later shot himself
 And whosoever looked on you they say
 That instant fell in love

Make haste! Make haste!

RUZIA At once To day your father counts upon you
 'Twas not for naught the young Czarevitch saw you,
 He could not hide his rapture wounded is he Already so it only needs to deal him
 A resolute blow, and instantly, my lady
 He'll be in love with you 'Tis now a month
 Since, quitting Cracow heedless of the war
 And the throne of Moscow, he has feasted here,
 Your guest enraging Poles alike and Russians
 Heavens! Shall I yet live to see the day?—
 Say you will not when to his capital
 Dimitry leads the queen of Moscow, say
 You'll not forsake me?

MARYNA

Dost thou truly think

I shall be queen?

RUZIA

Who if not you? Who here

Dares to compare in beauty with my mistress?

The race of Mniszech never yet has yielded

To any You in intellect are past

All praise—Happy the suitor whom your glance

Honors with its regard who wins your heart—

Whoe'er he be be he our king the dauphin

Of France or even this your poor Czarevitch, Though who he is and whence he comes God knows!

MARYNA He's the Czar's son as all the world admits

RUZIA And yet last winter he was but a servant
In Wisniowiecki's house

MARYNA He was in hiding

RUZIA I do not question it but do you know
What people say about him? That perhaps
He is a deacon run away from Moscow
In his own parish a notorious rogue

MARYNA What nonsense!

RUZIA Oh I do not credit it!
I only say he ought to bless his fate
That you have so preferred him to the others

SERVING-WOMAN (Runs in) The guests have come all ready

MARYNA There you see
You are prepared to chatter on till daybreak
Meanwhile I am not dressed —

RUZIA Within a moment!
I will be quite ready

(The WAITING WOMEN bustle)

MARYNA (Aside) I must find out all

CASTLE OF GOVERNOR MNISZECH AT SAMBOR

A Suite of Lighted Rooms Music

WISNIOWIECKI MNISZECH

MNISZECH With none but my Maryna doth he speak,
With no one else preoccupied—such doings
Seem to portend a wedding Now confess Didst ever think my daughter would be queen?

WISNIOWIECKI Indeed a marvel—Mniszech didst thou think

My servant would ascend the throne of Moscow?

MNISZECH And what a girl look you is my Maryna
I merely hinted to her Now, be careful!
Let not Dimitry slip—and lo! already
He is completely tangled in her toils

(The band plays a Polonaise The PRETENDER and MARYNA advance as the first couple)

MARYNA (Sotto voce to DIMITRY) To-morrow evening at eleven beside

The fountain that is in the linden alley

(They part A second couple)

CAVALIER What can Dimitry see in her?

LADY What say you?

She is a beauty

CAVALIER Yes, a marble nymph

Eyes lips devoid of life without a smile

(A fresh couple)

LADY He is not handsome but his looks are pleasing
And one can see he is of royal birth

(A fresh couple)

LADY When will the army march?

CAVALIER, When the Czarevitch
Orders it we are ready but us clear
The lady Mnischeb and Dumitry mean
To keep us prisoners here

LADY A pleasant durance

CAVALIER Truly if you
(They part the rooms become empty)

MINISZECH We old folk dance no longer,
The gay mazurka lures us not we press not Nor kiss the hands of charmers—ah! my friend
I've not forgotten the old pranks! Things now
Are not what once they were what once they were!
Youth I'll be sworn is not so bold nor beauty
So lively everything—confess my friend—
Has somehow become dull So let us leave them
My comrade let us go and find a flask
Of old Hungarian overgrown with mould
Let's bid my butler open an old bottle
And in a quiet corner tete à tete
Let's drain a draught a stream as thick as fat
And while we're so engaged let's think things over
Let us go brother

WISNIEWSKI Yes my friend let's go

The Garden The Fountain

PRETENDER (Enters) Here is the fountain hither will she come

I was not born a coward I have seen
Death near at hand and face to face with death

My spirit hath not blenched A life long dungeon
 Hath threatened me I have been close pursued
 And yet my spirit quailed not and by boldness
 I have escaped captivity But what Is this which now constricts my breath? What means
 This overpowering tremor or this quivering
 Of tense desire? No this is fear All day
 I have been waiting for this meeting pondering
 On all that I should say to her how best
 I might enmesh Maryna's haughty mind
 Calling her queen of Moscow But the hour
 Has come—and I remember naught, I cannot Recall the speeches I have learned by rote,
 Love puts imagination to confusion—
 But something there gleamed suddenly—a rustling
 Hush—no it was the moon's deceitful light
 It was the rustling of the breeze

MARYNA (Enters)

Czarevitch!

PRETENDER 'Tis she Now all the blood in me stands still

MARYNA Dimitry! Is it thou?

PRETENDER

Bewitching voice!
 (Goes to her)

Is it thou at last? Is it thou I see alone
 With me beneath the roof of quiet night?
 How slowly passed the tedious day! How slowly
 The glow of evening died away! How long
 I've waited in the gloom of night!

The hours

Are flitting fast and time is precious to me
 I did not grant a meeting here to thee
 To listen to a lover's tender speeches

No need of words I well believe thou lovest
 But listen with thy stormy doubtful fate
 I have resolved to join my own but one thing,
 Dimitry I require I claim that thou
 Disclose to me thy secret hopes thy plans
 Even thy fears that hand in hand with thee
 I may confront life boldly—not in blindness
 Of childlike ignorance not as the slave
 And plaything of my husband's light desires
 Thy speechless concubine but as thy spouse
 And worthy helpmate of the Czar of Moscow

PRETENDER Oh if it be only for one short hour,
 Forget the cares and troubles of my fate!
 Forget us the Czarevitch whom thou seest
 Before thee O behold in me Maryna
 A lover by thee chosen happy only
 In one look from thee Listen to the prayers
 Of love! Grant me to utter all wherewith
 My heart is full

MARYNA Prince this is not the time
 Thou tarriest and meanwhile the devotion
 Of thine adherents cooleth Hour by hour
 Danger becomes more dangerous difficulties
 More difficult already dubious rumors
 Are current novelty already takes
 The place of novelty and Godunov
 Adopts his measures

PRETENDER What is Godunov?
 Is thy sweet love, my only blessedness
 Swayed by Boris? Nay nay Indifferently
 I now regard his throne, his kingly power
 Thy love—without it what to me is life
 And glory's glitter and the throne of Russia?
 On the far steppe in a poor mud hut thou—

Thou wilt requite me for the kingly crown
Thy love——

MARYNA For shame! Forget not, prince, thy high
And sacred destiny thy dignity
Should be to thee more dear than all the joys
Of life and its allurements This thou canst not With anything compare Not to a youth,
Enthralled inflamed to madness by my beauty—
But to the heir of Moscow's throne I give My hand in solemn wise, to the Czarevitch Rescued by destiny

PRETENDER Torture me not,
Charming Maryna say not thus my rank
And not myself that thou didst choose Maryna!
Thou knowest not how sorely thou dost wound
My heart thereby What if—O fearful doubt!—
Say if blind destiny had not assigned me
A kingly birth, if I were not indeed
Son of Ivan were not this boy, so long Forgotten by the world—say then wouldst thou
Have loved me?

MARYNA Thou art Dmitry and aught else
Thou canst not be it is not possible
For me to love another

PRETENDER Nay! enough—
I have no wish to share with a dead body
A mistress who belongs to him I have done
With counterfeiting and will tell the truth
Know then that thy Dmitry long ago
Perished was buried—not to rise again
And wouldst thou know what sort of man I am?
Well I will tell thee I am—a poor monk

Grown weary of monastic servitude,
 I pondered neath the cowl my bold design
 Made ready for the world a miracle—
 And from my cell at last fled to the Cossacks
 To their wild hovels there I learned to handle
 Both steeds and swords I showed myself to you
 I called myself Dimitry and deceived
 The brainless Poles What say st thou proud Mary na?
 Art thou content with my confession? Why
 Dost thou keep silence?

MARYNA

O shame! O woe is me!
(Silence)

PRETENDER (Sotto voce) O whither hath a fit of anger led me?

The happiness devised with so much labor
 I have perchance destroyed for ever Madman
 What have I done? (Aloud) I see thou art ashamed
 Of love not princely so pronounce on me
 The fatal word my fate is in thy hands
 Decide I wait

(Falls on his knees)

Rise poor impostor! Think st thou
 To please with genuflections my vain heart
 As if I were a weak confiding girl?
 You err my friend prone at my feet I've seen
 Knights and counts nobly born but not for this Did I reject their prayers that a truant monk—

RETENDER (Rises) Scorn not the young pretender noble virtues

May lie perchance in him virtues deserving
 Of Moscow's throne even of thy priceless hand—

MARYNA Deserving of a noose insolent wretch!

And war, and this is all they need and thee,
Rebellious one believe me they will force
To hold thy peace Farewell

Czarevitch stay!

At last I hear the speech not of a boy,
But of a man It reconciles me to thee
Prince I forget thy mad outburst, and see Again Dimitry Listen now is the time!
Awake delay no more, lead on thy troops
Quickly to Moscow purge the Kremlin take Thy seat upon the throne of Moscow then
Send me the nuptial envoy, but God hears me, Until thou tread the step ascending to The throne until by thee Boris be vanquished,
My ears are deaf to any word of love
(Exit)

PIETER IDRA No—easier far to strive with Godunov,
Or to play false with courtly Jesuits Than with a woman Deuce take them, they re be yond
My power She twists and coils and crawls slips out
Of hand she his es threatens bites Ah serpent!
Serpent! 'Twas not for nothing that I trembled
She well nigh ruined me but I'm resolved
At daybreak I will put my troops in motion

THE LITHUANIAN FRONTIER

PRINCE KURBSKY and PRITENDER both on horseback Troops approach the frontier

KURBSKY (First to reach the frontier) There there it is there is the Russian frontier!
Fatherland! Holy Russia! I am thine!

With scorn from off my clothing now I shake
 The foreign dust and greedily I drink
 New air it is my native air O father
 Thy soul hath now been solaced in the grave
 Thy bones disgraced thrill with a sudden joy!
 Again doth flash our old ancestral sword
 This glorious sword—the dread of dark Kazan!
 This good sword—servant of the czars of Moscow!
 Now will it revel in its feast of slaughter
 Serving the master whom it trusts

PRETENDER (Rides quietly with bowed head) How happy

Is he how flushed with gladness and with glory
 His stainless soul! Brave knight I envy thee!
 The son of Kurbsky thou in exile nurtured
 Forgetting all the wrongs borne by thy father
 Redeeming his transgression in the grave
 Thou for the son of great Ivan art ready
 To shed thy blood to give the fatherland
 Its lawful czar Righteous art thou thy soul
 Should flame with joy

KURBSKY And dost not thou likewise Rejoice in spirit? There lies our Russia she Is thine Czarevitch! There thy people's hearts
 Are waiting for thee, there thy Moscow waits
 Thy Kremlin thy dominion

PRETENDER Russian blood
 O Kurbsky first must flow! You for the Czar Have drawn your swords you are stainless but I lead you
 Against your brothers I am summoning
 Lithuania against Russia I am showing
 To foes the longed for way to beauteous Moscow!

Let not my sin fall not on me, but on Him, the redeemer! Forward! Set out!

VIVANT Forward! Advance! And we to G^{lor}
 (They gallop The troops cross the f^{roze})

THE COUNCIL OF THE CZAR

To trouble them no let them pray for us
Such is the Czar's decree such the resolve
Of his boyars And now a weighty question
We shall decide ye know how everywhere
The insolent pretender hath sent forth
His artful rumors letters everywhere
By him distributed have sowed alarm
And doubt seditious whispers to and fro
Pass in the market places minds are seething
We needs must cool them gladly would I keep From executions but by what means and how?
That we will now determine Holy father
Thou first declare thy thought

PATRIARCH

The Blessed One

The All Highest hath instilled into thy soul
Great lord the breath of kindness and meek patience
Thou wishest not perdition for the sinner
Thou wilt wait quietly until delusion Shall pass away for pass away it will
And truth's eternal sun will dawn on all
Thy faithful bedesman one in worldly matters
No able judge ventures to-day to offer
His voice to thee This offspring of the devil
This unfrocked monk has well impersonated
Dimitry for the people Shamelessly
He clothed him with the name of the Czarevitch
As with a stolen vestment It only needs
To rip it—and he will be put to shame
By his own nakedness The means thereto
God hath Himself supplied Know Sire six years
Since then have fled 'twas in that very year
When to the seat of sovereignty the Lord
Anointed thee—there came to me one evening
A simple shepherd a venerable old man

Who told me a strange secret In my young days
He said I lost my sight and thenceforth knew not Nor day nor night, till my old age in vain
I plied myself with herbs and secret spells,
In vain did I resort in adoration
To the great wonder workers in the cloisters
Bathe I my dark eyes in vain with healing water
From out the holy wells The Lord vouchsafed not Healing to me Then I lost hope at last And grew accustomed to my darkness Even Slumber showed not to me things visible
Only of sounds I dreamed Once in deep sleep
I hear a childish voice, it speaks to me
Arise grandfather go to Uglich town
To the Cathedral of Transfiguration,
There pray over my grave The Lord is gracious—
And I shall pardon thee But who art thou?
I asked the childish voice I'm the Czarevitch Dumitry whom the Heavenly Czar hath taken Into His angel band and I am now
A mighty wonder worker Go, old man
I woke and pondered What is this? Maybe
God will in very deed vouchsafe to me
Belated healing I will go I bend
My footsteps to the distant road I reach
Uglich, repair unto the holy minster,
Hear mass and zealous soul aglow I weep
Sweetly, as if the blindness from mine eyes
Were flowing out in tears And when the people
Began to leave to my grandson I said
Lead me Ivan to where the young Czarevitch
Lies buried The boy led me—and I scarce
Had shaped before the grave a silent prayer
When sight illumed my eyeballs I beheld
The light of God my grandson and the tomb *

That is the tale Sire which the old man told (General confusion In the course of this speech BORIS several times wipes his face with his hand kerchief)

To Uglich then I sent where it was learned
 That many sufferers had likewise found
 Deliverance at the grave of the Czarevitch
 This is my counsel to the Kremlin send
 The sacred relics place them in the Minster
 Of the Archangel clearly will the people
 See then the godless villain's fraud the fiends
 Dread might will vanish as a cloud of dust
(Silence)

PRINCE SIUISKY What mortal holy father knoweth the ways

Of the All Highest? 'Tis not for me to judge Him
 Untainted sleep and power of wonder working
 He may upon the child's remains bestow
 But vulgar rumor must dispassionately
 And diligently be tested is it for us
 In stormy times of insurrection
 To weigh so great a matter? Will men not say
 That insolently we made of sacred things
 A worldly instrument? Even now the people
 Sway madly first this way then that even now
 There are enough already of loud rumors
 This is no time to vex the people's minds
 With aught so unexpected grave and strange
 I myself see us needful to demolish
 The rumor broadcast by the unfrocked monk
 But for this end other and simpler means
 Will serve Therefore when it shall please thee Sir,
 I will myself appear in public places
 I will dispel and exorcise this madness
 And will expose the vagabond's vile fraud

CZAR So be it! My lord Patriarch I pray thee
Go with us to the palace, where to-day
I must converse with thee

(Exeunt all the BOYARS follow them)

FIRST BOYAR (Sotto voce to another) Didst mark how pale
Our overign turned how from his face there poured
A mighty sweat?

SECOND BOYAR I durst not I confess
Uplift mine eyes nor breathe, nor even stir

FIRST BOYAR Prince Shuisky's saved the day A splea did fellow!

A PLAIN NEAR NOVGOROD SEVERSK

(December 21st, 1604)

SOLDIERS (Run in disorder) Woe woe! The Czar evlitch! The Poles! There they are! There they are!
(Enter CAPTAINS MARGERET and WALTER ROSEN)

MARGERET Whither whither? Allons! Go back!

ONE OF THE FUGITIVES You go back, if you like, cursed infidel

MARGERET Quoi quoi?

A OTHER Quack! quack! You foreign frog you like to croak at the Russian Czarevitch but we—we are orthodox folk

MARGERET Qu'est-ce à dire orthodox? Sacrés gueux, maudite canaille! Mordieu, mein Herr) enrage on dirait que sa n a pas de bras pour frapper sa n a que des jambes pour foutre le camp

ROSEN Es ist Schande

MARGERET Ventre saint gris! Je ne bouge plus d'un pas puisque le vin est tiré, il faut le boire Qu'en dites vous mein Herr?

ROSEN Sie haben recht

MARGERET Tudieu il y fait chaud! Ce diable de Pre tender comme ils l'appellent est un bougre, qui a du poil au cul—Qu'en pensez vous mein Herr?

ROSEN Oh ja

MARGERET He! voyez donc, voyez donc! L'action s'en gage sur les derrières de l'ennemi Ce doit être le brave Basmanov qui aurait fait une sortie

ROSEN Ich glaube das

(Enter GERMANS)

MARGERET Ha ha! voici nos allemands Messieurs!
Mein Herr dites leur donc de se raillier et, sacrebleu chargeons!

ROSEN Sehr gut Halt! (The GERMANS fall into line)
Marsch!

THE GERMANS (They march) Hal! Gott!
(Fight The RUSSIANS flee again)

POLES Victory! Victory! Glory to the Czar Dimitry!

DIMITRY (On horseback) Cease firing We have con quered Enough! Spare Russian blood Cease firing (Trumpets and drums)

SQUARE IN FRONT OF THE CATHEDRAL IN MOSCOW

The People

ONE MAN Will the Czar soon come out of the cathedral?

ANOTHER The mass is ended, now the Te Deum is going on

FIRST MAN What! have they already cursed him?

SECOND MAN I stood in the porch and heard how the deacon cried out —Grishka Otrepyev is anathema!

FIRST MAN Let them curse to their heart's content, the Czarevitch has nothing to do with Otrepyev

SECOND MAN But they are now singing mass for the repose of the soul of the Czarevitch

FIRST MAN What? A mass for the dead sung for a living man? They'll suffer for it, the godless wretches!

THIRD MAN Hiss! A noise Is it not the Czar?

FOURTH MAN No, it is the idiot

(A saintly idiot enters in an iron cap hung round with chains he is surrounded by boys)

BOYS Nick, Nick, iron nightcap! T r r r r—

OLD WOMAN Let the saintly one alone, you young devils. Pray for me Nick sinner that I am

IDiot Give, give give a penny

OLD WOMAN There is a penny for thee, remember me in thy prayers

IDIOT (Seats himself on the ground and sings)

The moon sails on

The kitten cries

Nick arise,

Pray to God

(The boys surround him again)

A BOY How do you do Nick? Why don't you take off your cap?

(Raps him on the iron cap)

How it rings!

IDIOT But I have got a penny

BOY That's not true now show it

(He snatches the penny and runs away)

IDIOT (Weeps) They have taken my penny they are hurting Nick!

THE PEOPLE The Czar the Czar is coming!

(The CZAR comes out from the Cathedral a BOYAR in front of him scatters alms among the beggars BOYARS)

IDIOT Boris Boris! The boys are hurting Nick

CZAR Give him alms! What is he crying about?

IDIOT Little children are hurting Nick Have them killed as thou hadst the little Czarevitch killed

BOYARS Go away fool! Seize the fool!

CZAR Leave him alone Pray thou for me, poor Nick
(Exit)

IDIOT (Calling after him) No no! It is impossible to pray for Czar Herod the Mother of God forbids it.

SEVSK

The PRETENDER surrounded by his supporters

PRETENDER Where is the prisoner?

A POLE

Here

PRETENDER

Call him before me.

(Enter a RUSSIAN prisoner)

Who art thou? Speak

PRISONER

Rozhnov a nobleman of Moscow

PRETENDER Hast long been in the service?

PRISONER

Nigh a month

PRETENDER Art not ashamed Rozhnov that thou hast drawn

The sword against me?

PRISONER

What else could I do?

'Twas not our wish

PRETENDER

Didst fight beneath the walls

Of Seversk?

PRISONER

'Twas two weeks after the battle

I came from Moscow

PRETENDER

What of Godunov?

PRISONER The battle's loss Mstislavsky's wound, hath caused him

Much apprehension Shunsky he hath sent
To take command

PRETENDER

But why hath he recalled

Basmanov unto Moscow?

PRISONER The Czar rewarded
His services with honor and with gold
Basmanov now sits in the council of The Czar

PRETENDER The army had more need of him
Well how go things in Moscow?

PRISONER. All is quiet,
Thank God

PRETENDER Say do they look for me?

PRISONER God knows
They dare not talk too much there now For some Have had their tongues cut off and others even Their heads It is a fearsome state of things—
Each day an execution All the prisons
Are crammed Wherever two or three foregather
In public places instantly a spy
Worms himself in the Czar himself examines At leisure the informers It is just Sheer misery so silence is the best

PRETENDER. An enviable life for that Czar's people!
Well, and what of the army?

PRISONER What of it?
Clothed and full fed the army I content.

PRETENDER. But is it very large?

PRISONER God knows

PRETENDER All told
Will there be thirty thousand?

PRISONER Yes twill run
Even to fifty thousand
(The PRETENDER reflects those around him glance at one another)

A FOREST

PRETENDER AND PUSHKIN

(In the background lies a dying horse)

PRETENDER Ah my poor horse! How gallantly he charged

To-day in the last battle and when wounded
How swiftly bore me My poor horse!

PUSHKIN (To himself) Well here's A great ado about a horse when all
Our army's smashed to bits

PRETENDER. I listen! Perhaps He's but exhausted by the loss of blood
And will recover

PUSHKIN Nav nav he is dying

PRETENDER (Goes to his horse)
My poor horse!—what to do? Take off the bridle
And loose the girth Let him at least die free
(He unbridles and unsaddles the horse Some POLE enter)

Good evening gentlemen! How is it I see not Kurbsky among you? I did note to-day
How he cut through to where the fight was thickest
Around the man like swaying ears of corn
The sabers flashed but higher than the rest
His blade was brandished and his mighty cry
Drowned all cries else Where is my knight?

POLE He fell
Upon the field of battle

PRETENDER Honor the brave
And peace be to his soul! How few unscathed

Are left us from the fight! Accursed Cossacks, Traitors and miscreants, you, you it is Have ruined us! Not even for three minutes
To keep the foe at bay! I'll teach the villains!
Every tenth man I'll hang Brigands!

Whoever

Be guilty, all the same we were clean worsted Routed!

PRETENDER

But yet we nearly conquered Just

When I had dealt with their front rank, the Ger mans

Repulsed us utterly But they're fine fellows!
By God! fine fellows! I do love them for it
I'll form of them an honorable troop

PUSHKIN Where shall we spend the night ?

PRETENDER

Here in the forest

Why not rest here tonight? And just at daybreak
We'll take the road and dine in Rytsk Good night.
(He lies down puts a saddle under his head and falls asleep)

PUSHKIN A pleasant sleep Czarevitch! Smashed to bits, Rescued by flight alone he is as careless
As a mere child 'tis clear that Providence
Protects him and we friends, must not lose heart

MOSCOW PALACE OF THE CZAR

BORIS BASMANOV

CZAR He's vanquished but what profit lies in that?
We are crowned with a vain conquest he has mustered
Again his scattered forces and anew

Threatens us from the ramparts of Putivl
 Meanwhile what are our heroes doing? They re
 At Krom where from its rotten battlements
 A band of Cossacks braves them There is glory!
 No I am ill content with them thyself
 I shall despatch to take command of them
 I grant command not unto birth but brains
 Their pride of precedence let it be wounded!
 The time has come for me to hold in scorn
 The murmur of a worthless well born mob,
 And quash the vicious custom

BASMANOV Ay my lord
 Blessed a hundredfold will be that day
 When fire consumes the lists of noblemen
 With their dissensions their proud pedigrees

CZAR That day is not far off let me but first Subdue the insurrection of the people

BASMANOV Why trouble about that? The people al ways
 Are ready for rebellion even so
 The swift steed champs the bit so doth a lad
 Chase at his father's ruling But what of it?
 The rider quietly controls the steed
 The father sways the son

CZAR Sometimes the horse
 Doth throw the rider nor does the son at all times
 Abide the father's will we can restrain
 The people only by unsleeping sternness
 So thought Ivan sagacious autocrat
 And storm subduer so his fierce grandson thought
 No no kindness is lost upon the people
 Do good—it thanks you not at all extort

He sat and suddenly he fell blood gushed
From mouth and ears

(The CZAR is carried in on a chair All the Czar's household all the BOYARS)

CZAR

Let all depart—alone

Leave the Czarevitch with me (All withdrawn) I am dying

Let us embrace Farewell my son forthwith
Thou wilt begin to reign—O God my God!
Forthwith I shall appear before Thy presence—
And now I have no time to shrive my soul
But yet my son I feel thou art dearer to me
Than is my soul's salvation—be it so!
A subject was I born it seemed ordained
That I should die a subject in obscurity
Yet I attained to sovereignty but how?
Ask not Enough that thou art innocent
Thou wilt reign rightfully and I alone
Am answerable for all to God Dear son Cherish no false delusion of thy free will Blind not thyself Stormy the days wherein Thou dost assume the crown He is dangerous
This strange pretender with a fearful name
He is weaponed I at last with years grown skilled In ruling could full well put down rebellion
They quaked with fear before me treachery
Dared not to raise its voice but thou a boy
An inexperienced ruler how wilt thou
Covern amid the tempests quench revolt
Shackle sedition? But God is great! He gives Wisdom to youth to weakness strength—Give ear
Firstly select a steadfast counselor
Cool of ripe years loved of the people honored
Mid the boyars for birth and fame—say Shuisky
The army craves to-day a skilful leader

Appoint Basmanov do not heed the murmurs
 Of the boyars Thou from thy early years
 Didst sit with me in council, thou dost know
 The formal course of government change not Procedure Custom is the soul of states
 Of late I have been driven to restore
 Bans executions—these thou canst rescind,
 And they will bless thee, as they blessed thy uncle
 When he succeeded to the Terrible.
 At the same time little by little, tighten Anew the reins of government now slacken
 But let them not slip from thy hands Be gracious, Accessible to foreigners, accept
 Their service trustfully Preserve with strictness
 The Church's discipline Be taciturn
 The royal voice must never lose itself
 Upon the air in vain it must be like
 A sacred bell that sounds but to announce
 Some great disaster or great festival
 Dear son thou art approaching to those years
 When woman's beauty agitates our blood
 Preserve, preserve the sacred purity
 Of innocence and haughty modesty
 He who through passion has been wont to wallow
 In vicious pleasures in his youthful days,
 Becomes in manhood bloodthirsty and surly,
 His mind untimely darken Of thy household
 Be always head show honor to thy mother,
 But rule thy house thyself thou art a man
 And czar to boot Be tender to thy sister—
 For thou art now, alas her sole protector

FEODOR (On his knees) No, no live on my father and reign long
 Without thee both the folk and we will perish

CZAR *For me all is at an end—mine eyes grow dark,
I feel the coldness of the grave—*

(Enter the PATRIARCH and PRELATES, followed by all the BOYARS The CLARINA is supported on either side the CZAREVNA is sobbing)

Who's there?

Ah, 'tis the vestment—so! the holy vows—
The hour has struck The Czar becomes a monk
And the dark sepulchre will be my cell
Wait yet a little my lord Patriarch
I still am Czar Listen to me boyars
To this my son I now commit the czardom
Do homage to Feodor Basmanov thou
And ye my friends on the grave's brink I pray you
To serve my son with zeal and rectitude!
As yet he is both young and uncorrupted
Swear ye?

BOYARS We swear

CZAR I am content Forgive me
My sins and my surrenders to temptation
The harm I meant and that I did not mean—
Approach now holy father I am ready
(The rite begins The women who have swooned are carried out)

ARMY HEADQUARTERS

BASMANOV leads in PUSHKIN

BASMANOV Here enter and speak freely So to me
He sent thee

PUSHKIN He doth offer thee his friendship
And the next place to his in Muscovy

BASMANOV But even thus highly by Feodor am I Already raised, the army I command
 For me he scorned nobility of rank
 And the wrath of the boyars I swore allegiance
 To him

PUSHKIN Thou'st sworn allegiance to the man
 Who lawfully succeedeth to the throne
 Suppose that there is one whose rights are greater

BASMANOV Enough, tell me no idle tales! I know Who the man is

PUSHKIN Russia and Lithuania
 Have long acknowledged him to be Dimitry
 But, be that as it may I don't insist
 Perchance he is indeed the real Dimitry,
 Perchance but a pretender only this
 I know, that soon or late Boris's son
 Will yield Moscow to him

BASMANOV So long as I
 Stand by the youthful Czar so long he will not Forsake the throne We have sufficient troops,
 Thank God! With victory I will inspire them
 And whom do you intend to send against me
 Is it Karela is it Mnischeh? Are Your numbers many? You have scarce eight thousand

PUSHKIN Indeed thou art mistaken they will not Amount even to that I say myself
 Our army is mere trash the Cossacks only Rob villages the Poles but brag and drink
 The Russians—what shall I say?—with thee I'll not Dissemble, but Basmanov dost thou know Wherein our true strength lies in the Nor yet in Polish aid but in—

Yes popular opinion Dost remember
 The triumph of Dimitry dost remember
 His peaceful conquests when without a blow
 The docile towns surrendered and the mob
 Bound the recalcitrant leaders? Thou thyself
 Wast witness was it willingly your troops
 Waged war against him? Aye and when? Boris
 Was then supreme But would they now?—Nay nay,
 It is too late to blow on the cold embers
 Of this dispute with all thy wits and firmness
 Thoult not withstand him Were it not far better
 If thou wouldst be the one to take the lead,
 Proclaim Dimitry czar and by that act
 Bind him thy friend for ever? How thinkest thou?

BASMANOV To morrow thou shalt know

PUSHKIN Resolve

BASMANOV Farewell

PUSHKIN Ponder it well Basmanov

(Exit)

BASMANOV He is right

Everywhere treason ripens what s to do?
 Wait that the rebels may deliver me
 In bonds to this Otrepyev? Had I not better
 Fores all the stormy onset of the flood
 Myself to—ah! but to forswear mine oath!
 Incurring fresh disgrace from age to age!
 The trust of my young sovereign to requite
 With horrible betrayal! Tis a light thing
 For a dishonored exile to be plotting
 Sedition and conspiracy but I?
 Is it for me the favorite of my lord?—
 But death—but power—the people s miseries

(He ponders)

ANOTHER So you've pity for them? Accursed house!

FIRST MAN The father was a villain but the children are innocent

SECOND MAN The apple does not fall far from the apple tree

XENIA Dear brother! dear brother! I think the boyars are coming to us

FEODOR That is Golitsyn Mosalsky I do not know the others

XENIA Ah! dear brother my heart sinks (GOLITSYN MOSALSKY, MOLCHANOV and SHCHERE DINOV, behind them three soldiers)

THE PEOPLE Make way, make way the boyars are coming

(They enter the house)

ONE OF THE PEOPLE What have they come for?

ANOTHER Most like to make Feodor Godunov swear allegiance

A THIRD Very like Hark! what a noise in the house! What an uproar! They are fighting!

THE PEOPLE Do you hear? A scream! That was a woman's voice Let us go up!—The doors are locked—the cries have ceased

(The doors are thrown open MOSALSKY appears on the steps)

MOSALSKY Good folk! Maria Godunov and her son Feodor have poisoned themselves We have seen their dead bodies

(The PEOPLE are silent with horror)

Why are ye silent Cry Long live Czar Dimitry Ivashch'

(The PEOPLE are speechless)

JEAN He says he cannot lend another groat
Unless you give him good security!

ALBERT Security! And where can I find that?

JEAN That's what I said

ALBERT And he—

JEAN He sighed and shrugged

ALBERT Didn't you tell him that my father's rich
Himself as any Jew and that ere long
I shall succeed him?

JEAN That I told him too

ALBERT And he—

JEAN He shrugged and sighed

ALBERT What wretched luck!

JEAN He said he'd come himself

ALBERT Thank God for that I'll never let him go without a ransom (Knock at the door)
Who's there?

(JEW enters)

JEAN Your humble servant

ALBERT Oh my friend!
You cursed Jew you honored Solomon
Please come this way so you I hear won't give Me any credit

JEAN Ah my gracious lord
With all respect to you I'd fain but cannot
'Where can I get the money?' I'm quite ruined Helping you lords with all my might and main

For no one pays and I have come to ask
If you could not pay back at least a part

ALBERT You rascal! Do you think if I had money
I'd parley here with you? But stop enough!
Be not so obstinate friend Solomon
Out with your ducats Pay me down a hundred,
Before we search you

JEW Pay you down a hundred!
Where should I get a hundred ducats?

ALBERT Listen
Aren't you ashamed denying to your friends
Your help?

JEW I swear to you

ALBERT Enough enough!
So you demand security? What nonsense!
What shall I give you for security?
A pig skin? Had I anything to pawn
I would have sold it long ago You dog
Is not my knightly word enough?

JEW Your word
As long as you're alive means much yes much
The treasure-chests of Flanders wealthy men
Your word will open like a talisman
But if to a poor Jew like me you give it
In guarantee and afterwards you die
(Which God forbid!) your word will then be left
In my poor hands as if it were a key
To a rich casket sunken in the deep

ALBERT Do you suppose my father will survive me

JEW Who knows? Our days are not our own to measure

But yesterday a youth was flourishing
And now he's dead and four old men must bear

His corpse on stooping shoulders to the grave.
The baron's healthy He may live for ten
Or twenty years—or twenty five or thirty

ALBERT You lying Jew! When thirty years are out,
Why I'll be over fifty then what use
Will money be to me?

JEW What use? Why money,
Always at any age is useful to us
The young man seeks in it a ready servant
And here and there, he throws it recklessly,
The old man sees in it a trusty friend
And guards it like the apple of his eye

ALBERT My father sees in money neither friend
Nor servant but a master—whom he serves
And serves him how? Like an Algerian slave,
Like a chained dog Within his fireless hovel
He lives drinks water, eats dry crusts of bread
Ne'er sleeps at night but runs about and barks
The gold meanw hile is sleeping in the chests
All quietly but hush! the day will come
When it will serve me and forget to sleep

JEW Yes at his lordship's funeral will flow
More gold than tears And may God make you not His heir as soon as possible

ALBERT Amen!

JEW But might I

ALBERT What?

JEW Well I was thinking meant Exist to make

ALBERT What's that you say?

JEW Well—just—
I have a friend a little queer old man
A Jew a poor apothecary

ALBERT Oh!
A usurer like you? Or honestest?

JEW Oh no my lord he drives a different trade
He makes up drops no really it's a marvel
The way they work

ALBERT What use are they to me?

JEW Pour but three drops into a glass of water—
They have no taste or color—he who drinks
Without a pang of colic in his belly
Or pain or even nausea will die

ALBERT So it's in poison that your old man traffics

JEW Ah—yes—in poison

ALBERT What? Are you proposing
To lend to me two hundred vials of poison
Instead of gold—a vial for every ducat?
Or what?

JEW It pleases you to laugh at me
I simply wished perhaps you might I thought
It might be time the baron ceased to live

ALBERT Poison my father! And you dare before
My very face—O seize him Jean—you dare
Before his very son—you dirty Jew
You dog you snake upon our gate posts you
Will hang straightway for this

JEW My lord I'm sorry!
Forgive me I was jesting

ALBERT Jean a rope!

JEW I I was jesting Here's some money for you

ALBERT Begone you dog!

(JEW goes out)

To this I'm brought by my Own father's advance! The Jew could dare
Propose to me Give me a glass of wine!
I'm all a tremble But I'm still in need
Of money run and stop the cursed Jew
And get his ducats Yes and fetch me here
My inkhorn A receipt I'll give the rascal
Don't let the Jew come here No stay a moment—

His coins will reek of poison like the pieces
Of silver Judas took I asked for wine!

JEAN There's not a drop of wine

ALBERT Not even that
That Raymond sent me as a gift from Spain?

JEAN Last night I took the last remaining bottle
To the sick blacksmith

ALBERT I remember Yes
Well give me water What a cursed life!
No it's decided—to the duke I'll go
And ask for justice Let him make my father Regard me as a son and not a mouse born in a cellar

SCENE II

(Vault)

THE BARON As the young scapegrace bides the trying hour

With some corrupt enchantress or perchance
Some foolish girl seduced by him so I

All day abide the time when I shall come Down to my secret vault and trusty chests
 O happy day! To day into the sixth
 Of all my chests (one not yet full) my fingers
 Will dribble one more handful of my gold
 It seems a trifle Yet by trifles us
 That treasures grow And somewhere I have read
 That once an emperor bade his warriors take Handfuls of earth and throw them in a heap--
 And a proud hill arose and from its height
 The emperor with joy could contemplate
 A verdant valley covered with white tents
 And a broad sea with all its scudding ships
 So bearing handful after handful I
 Have brought my wonted tribute to this vault
 And raised my hill--and from its crest survey
 My vast domains And who can set their bounds?
 For demon like I rule the world from here
 I've but to wish--a palace will arise
 Into my splendid gardens there will dance
 A company of nymphs in wanton sport
 The muses too will bring to me their tribute
 Free genius will become my willing slave
 Virtue herself and toil that never sleeps
 With men submissive my reward will wait
 I've but to whistle--to my knees will creep
 Obedient and timid bloodstained crime
 And lick my hand and look into my eyes
 And read in them the sign of my desire
 All things obey me--none do I obey
 I am above all wishes and all cares
 I know my power and this knowledge is Enough for me (He gazes on his gold)
 It seems a trifling pile,
 Yet who can sum the tale of human cares
 Deceptions tears entreaties maledictions

Of which it is a ponderous deputy!
 There's somewhere here an old doubloon Here tis

This very day a widow gave it me
 But first a whole half day before my window
 She knelt with her three children wailing loud
 The rain came down and stopped and came again
 The hypocrite ne'er budged I could of course,
 Have driven her off but something whispered to me
 That she was bringing what her husband owed me
 And didn't want to be in jail to-morrow
 And this one? That's the one that Thibault brought Where did the lazy rascal ever get it?
 He stole it I suppose, or maybe there,
 At night upon the highway in the wood
 Ah yes! If all the tears the blood and sweat Poured out for all that is inleeping here
 Should from the bosom of the earth spring forth
 Then 'twere a second Flood—and I should drown
 Within my trusty vault But now—tis time

(He prepares to open the chest)

Whenever the time comes to unlock a chest,
 I fall into a trembling and a fever
 It is not fear (Oh no! Whom should I fear?
 My sword is by my side its trusty blade
 Will answer for the gold) but in the act
 A strange uncanny feeling grips my heart
 Physicians do assure us there are people
 Who find a pleasure in the act of murder
 So when I put the key into the lock
 I feel what they must feel the very instant
 They plunge the knife into the victim—pleasure
 And horror both at once (He opens the chest)

My paradisel

(He drops in the coins one by one)

Away you go! Enough you've roved the world

A servant to the needs and lusts of man
Sleep here the sleep of strength and quietude
As in the distant heavens sleep the gods!
To-day I wish to hold a mighty feast
Before each chest I'll place a lighted candle
And open every one and I myself
Amidst them all shall view their shining heaps (He lights candles and opens the chests one after the other)

I am a king! What magic radiance spreads!
Strong is my kingdom and obedient to me
My bliss is here my honor and my glory!
I am a king! But after I am dead
Who will become its sovereign? My heir!
A youthful madcap—and a spendthrift too!
Of rakes and libertines the boon companion!
Hardly shall I be cold when he'll come down
This wastrel to these peaceful silent vaults
With all his crew of fawning greedy courtiers
Stealing my keys from off my very corpse
He'll open all my chests with peals of laughter
And all my garnered treasure heaps will flow
Into his pockets—satin yes but holey
He'll smash the sacred vessels and he'll soak
The mud with oil that should anoint a king
He'll squander But who gave him such a right?

As a free gift did all this come to me
Or in the way of sport as to a gambler
Who rattles dice then rakes his money in?
Who knows how many bitter self-repressions
And passions tamed and heavy thoughts and days
Of care and sleepless nights all this has cost me?
Or will my son say that my heart's overgrown
With moss and that I never knew desires
Nor ever felt the gnawing tooth of conscience

Conscience that sharp-clawed beast that scrapes and scrapes

About the heart, that unwisted guest,

Importunate companion creditor

Most churlish hag at whose unhallowed word

The moon grows dark, and in churchyards the tombs

Are set a-quaking and send forth their dead!

No build up first a fortune for yourself,

And then behold! A wretch will come and squander

All that which by your blood and sweat you won

Oh if I could but shield my vault from such Unworthy eyes! If only from the grave

I could but come and like a guardian shade,

Sit on my chest and from all living creatures

Protect my treasures as I guard them now!

SCENE III

In the castle

ALBERT THE DUKE

ALBERT Believe me Sire that long I've stood the shame

Of bitter poverty The direst need

Alone has driven me to make complaint

DUKE I do believe it such a man as you

My noble knight does not accuse his father

Except the need be dire Such knaves are rare

So set your mind at rest I shall exhort

Your father privately and make no scandal

I'm waiting for him Long us since we met

He was my grandsire's friend I well remember

When I was still a youngster, he would seat

Me on his horse and cover me with his Great heavy shield as with a bell

(Looks out of the window)

Who's this?

It isn't he?

ALBERT

It is my lord

DUKE

Then go

Into that room I'll summon you

(ALBERT goes out BARON enters)

Well Baron

I'm glad to see you look so hale and hearty

BARON I'm happy Sire to think my health allowed

Me—spite of age—to come at your command

DUKE It's very long ago we parted Baron

Do you remember me?

BARON

Remember Sire?

I see you as twere now A lively youngster

You were my lord—The duke (who's dead) would say

To me Well Philip (for he always called me

Philip) What say you? Eh? In twenty years

I do assure you both of us will be

But drivelling dotards in that youngster's pres ence

Your presence twas he meant

Well well renew

Acquaintance now My court you've quite forgot

BARON I'm old my lord! what should I do at court?

You're young festivities and tournaments

Are to your taste But at my age I find

No pleasure in them Yet if God send war

I'm ready though it be with groans to clamber

Once more upon my horse's back my strength

Will still suffice to draw my ancient sword
Albeit with trembling hand, in your defence

DUKE Baron your loyal zeal is known to us
You were my grandsire's friend my father too Respected you and I have always thought you
A brave and trusty knight, but please sit down
You've children Baron?

BARON I've an only son

DUKE Why do I never see him at my court?
You it may bore but both his age and station
Make it but fitting that he should attend us

BARON My son dislikes a noisy worldly life
He's of a shy and melancholy turn—Around the castle through the woods he roves
Forever like a fawn

DUKE It is not well
He grow a hermit well accustom him
Straightway to revels balls and tournaments
Send him to me and fix upon your son
A maintenance that doth besit his station
I see you frown—the journey wearied you Perhaps?

BARON My lord it is not weariness
But you have much confused me This confession
I would not make before you but your words
Compel me to report about my son
Things which I fain would have concealed from you.
Unfortunately Sire he is unworthy
Of your most gracious favors and regard
For all his youth he's spent in riotous living
In basest vice.

DUKE The cause of this good Baron,
May be that he's alone For solitude
And idleness are ruinous to youth
Send him to us for here he will forget
The habits that his wilding life begat

BARON Forgive me gracious Sire but really I Am quite unable to consent to this

DUKE But why?

BARON O! Let an old man go my lord!

DUKE No I demand reveal to me the reason
Of your refusal

BARON Gainst my son I am
Most angered

DUKE Wherefore?

BARON For his wicked crime

DUKE But what does it consist in tell me that?

BARON Oh spare me dear my lord

DUKE Tis passing strange!
Are you ashamed of him?

BARON Ashamed indeed

DUKE But what can he have done?

BARON He he did plan
To kill me

DUKE Kill To justice then shall I Deliver him vile felon that he is

BARON I shall not try to prove it though I know
That he is simply longing for my death

And though I know that he has made attempt
To

DUKE What?

BARON To rob me
 (ALBERT rushes into the room)

ALBERT Baron that's a lie!

DUKE (To the son) How dare you?

BARON You! You here! You dare! To me!
To me your father dare say such a word!
I lie? And that before my lord himself!
To me to me Am I a knight no longer?

ALBERT A liar's what you are!

BARON Even yet the thunder
O God of justice has not crashed! Then pick
This up and let the sword decide between us!
 (Throws down his glove his son promptly picks it up)

ALBERT Thanks father for your gift it is the first!

DUKE What have I seen? What is it I have witnessed?
A son takes up his aged father's challenge!
On evil days I fell when I did put
The ducal chain upon me! Silence you
Insensate man and you young tiger cub!
Enough! (To the son) Have done with this at once and give
That glove to me forthwith
 (Takes it away from him)

ALBERT (Aside) This is a pity!

DUKE The way he clutched it! Out upon you monster!
Begone and never dare to show yourself

Before my eyes until such time as I Shall summon you

(Exit ALBERT)

And you unhappy gray beard
Are you not filled with shame?

BARON

Forgive me Sirr

I cannot stand my knees are giving way
I'm choking choking where where are my keys?
My keys my keys!

DUKE

He's dead O God in heaven!

What dreadful times! and ah! what dreadful hearts!
[1830]

* MOZART AND SALIERI *

SCENE I

A room

SALIERI Men say there is no justice upon earth
But neither is there justice in the Heavens!
That's clear to me as any simple scale
For I was born with a great love for art
When—still a child—I heard the organ peal
Its lofty measures through our ancient church
I listened all attention—and sweet tears
Sweet and involuntary tears would flow
Though young I spurned all frivolous pursuits
All studies else than music were to me
Repugnant and with stubborn arrogance
I turned from them to dedicate myself
To music only Hard is the first step
And tiresome the first journey I overcame
Early discomfitures and craftsmanship
I set up as a pedestal for art
Became the merest craftsman to my fingers
I lent a docile, cold agility
And suretness to my ear I stifled sounds
And then dissected music like a corpse
Checked harmony by algebraic rules
And only then tested and proved in science,
I ventured to indulge creative fancy

I started to create—but secretly—
Not daring yet even to dream of glory
Not seldom having spent in silent cell
Two or three days forgetting sleep and food
Tasting the joy and tears of inspiration,
I threw my labors in the fire and watched
My thoughts and songs—the children of my brain—
Flame up, then vanish in a wisp of smoke
What do I say? When the great Gluck appeared Revealing new deep captivating secrets—
Did I not then reject all I had learned
All I had loved and ardently believed
And did I not walk bravely in his footsteps
Unmurmuring like one who gone astray
Is bid by one he meets retrace his journey?
By vigorous and tense persistency
At last, within the boundless realm of music
I reached a lofty place At last fame deigned
To smile on me and in the hearts of men
I found an echo to my own creation
Then I was happy and enjoyed in peace
My labors, my success my fame—nor less
The labors and successes of my friends
My fellow workers in the art divine
No! Never did I know the sting of envy
Oh never!—neither when Piccini triumphed
In capturing the ears of skittish Paris
Nor the first time there broke upon my sense
Iphigenia's opening harmonies
Who dares to say that ever proud Salieri
Could stoop to envy like a loathsome snake
Trampled upon by men yet still alive
And impotently gnawing sand and dust?
No one! But now—myself I say it—now
I do know envy! Yes, Salieri envies
Deeply in anguish envies—O ye Heavens!

Where where is justice when the sacred gift,
 When deathless genius comes not to reward
 Perfervid love and utter self denial
 And toils and strivings and beseeching prayers
 But puts her halo round a lack wit s skull
 A frivolous idler s brow? O Mozart Mozart!
(Enter MOZART)

MOZART Ah! You saw me enter! I was hoping
 To treat you to an unexpected jest

SALIERI You here! How long have you been here?

MOZART A moment
 I started out to see you bringing something
 To show to you but just as I was passing
 The inn I heard a fiddle Dear Salieri
 In all your life you never yet have heard
 Such funny sounds! A blind old fiddler there
 Was playing Voi che sapete Heavens!
 I couldn t wait I brought the fiddler with me
 To entertain you with his artistry
 Come in!

(Enter a blind old man with a fiddle)

Now play us something out of Mozart!

(The old man plays an air from Don Juan MOZART bursts out laughing)

SALIERI And you can laugh?

MOZART Why yes of course Salieri!
 And do you not laugh too?

SALIERI I do not Mozart
 I do not laugh when some poor wretched dauber
 Besmears a masterpiece of Raphael s painting
 I do not laugh when some grotesque buffoon
 Dishonors Dante with a parody
 Begone old man!

MOZART Oh wait! Here's something! Take it
 Drink to my health

(The old man goes out)

But you my dear Salieri
 Are not in a good mood to-day I'll come
 Another time

SALIERI What were you bringing me?

MOZART Nothing—the merest trifle One night lately
 As I was tossing on my sleepless bed
 Into my head came two or three ideas
 Today I wrote them down and I should like To hear your comments on them but at present
 You can't attend to me

SALIERI Ah Mozart Mozart!
 When can I not attend to you? Sit down
 I'm listening!

MOZART (at the piano)
 Just imagine someone—well
 Let's say myself—a trifle younger though—
 In love—but not too deeply—just enamored—
 I'm with some lady—or a friend—say you
 I'm cheerful Suddenly a glimpse of death
 The dark descends—or something of the sort
 Now listen (He plays)

SALIERI You were bringing this to me
 And you could loiter at a common tavern
 To hear a blind old fiddler? God in Heaven!
 Mozart you are unworthy of yourself!

MOZART Well do you like it?

SALIERI What profundity
 What boldness and what art of composition!

You Mozart, are a god and know it not!
I know it

MOZART Bah! Really? Perhaps I am—
However it may be my godhood's furnished

SALIERI Listen this evening we shall dine together—
The Golden Lion inn is where we meet

MOZART That's very kind But let me just run home,
To tell my wife not to expect me back
For dinner (Goes out)

SALIERI I'll await you do not fail me
No longer can I thwart my destiny
For I am chosen to arrest his course
If he lives on then all of us will perish—
High priests and servants of the art of music—
Not I alone with my overshadowed glory
And what will it avail if Mozart live
And scale still higher summits of perfection?
Will he thereby raise art itself? No no
Twill fall again when once he disappears
He will not leave a single heir behind
Then what can he avail us? Like a cherub
He brings to us some songs of paradise,
And wakens in us children of the dust
A wingless longing—then he flies away!
Well let him fly away! We'll speed his going!

This poison—my Isora's parting gift—
For eighteen years I've carried on my person
And often since that day has life appeared Unbearable to me And I have sat
At table with my unsuspecting foe
Yet never to the whisper of temptation
Have yielded not because I am a coward
Nor yet because I do not feel in insult

Nor from a love of life I always tarried
 Whenever thirst for death would torture me—Why die? I asked and mused Perhaps—who knows?
 Life yet may bring to me unlooked for gifts
 The trance of genius yet may visit me
 And the creative night and inspiration
 Perhaps a second Haydn may create Great master works and I'll rejoice in them "
 While I was feasting with my hated guest
 Perhaps I thought a still more loathsome foe
 I'll find perhaps a still more loathsome insult
 Will crash upon me from a lordly height—
 Then then your day will come Isora's gift!
 And I was right! And I have found at last
 My enemy at last a second Haydn
 Has drenched my soul with raptures all divine!
 Now—is the hour! O sacred gift of love
 Today I'll pour thee into friendship's cup!

Private room at an inn piano

MOZART AND SALIERI (At table)

SALIER. What makes you look so glum to-day?

MOZART Me? Nothing!

SALIER. Mozart I swear there's something on your mind!

The dinner's good the wine is excellent
 Yet you sit silent moping

MOZART

I confess

My Requiem is on my mind

SALIERI

Aha!

You're working at a Requiem? Since when?

MOZART About three weeks But one queer circumstance

Did I not tell you?

No

MOZART

Then listen now

I came home late one night three weeks ago
 They told me that a man had called to see me
 Now, why I cannot tell but all that night
 I thought Who can this be? What can he want
 Of me? The following day a second time
 He called again and found me not at home
 Next day, while I was playing on the floor
 With my young son I heard them summon me
 I left the room A man dressed all in black,
 With courtly bow, commissioned me to write
 A Requiem—and vanished I sat down
 At once and started writing Since that hour
 My man in black has never called again
 I'm glad of it so I'd be loth to part
 With my creation though the Requiem now
 Is finished quite But meanwhile I

SALIERI

Go on!

MOZART I feel a bit ashamed confessing

SALIERI

What?

MOZART That day and night my man in black gives ne er

A moment's peace to me Behind me ever
He hovers like a shadow At this moment,
It seems to me he's sitting at this table,
An uninvited guest

SALIERI What child! h' terrors!
Dispel these idle fancies Beaumarchais
Was always saying Listen friend Salieri
Whenever gloomy thoughts beset your mind
Why then uncork a bottle of champagne,
Or read Le Mariage de Figaro

MOZART Yes! Beaumarchais and you were friends, I know
And wasn't it for him you wrote Tarare?
A glorious thing! There's one motif in that I keep repeating it when I am happy—
La la la la Ah, is it true, Sabini
That Beaumarchais once poisoned someone?

[illegible]

MOZART He was a genius
Like you and me But villainy and genius
Are two things than can never go together

SALIERI You think so?
(Pours poison into MOZART'S glass)
Well, now drink

MOZART Your health, my friend
I drink and pledge that candid covenant
That links the names of Mozart and Salieri
Two sons of harmony (Drinks)

SALIERI Stop stop I say
You've drunk it all! and waited not for me?

MOZART (Throws his napkin on the table)

Well, now I've had my fill (Goes to the piano)

Salieri, listen

I'll play my Requiem (Plays)

What! Are you weeping?

SALIERI Yes these are the first tears I've ever shed
I feel both pain and pleasure like a man
Who has performed a sad and painful duty,
Or like to one from whom the healing knife
Has cut a suffering limb Friend Mozart mark not These tears Continue playing hasten thus
To fill my soul with paradisa! strains

MOZART If only everyone could feel the power
Of harmony like you! But no for then
The world could not exist no man would stoop
To care about the needs of vulgar life—
For all would give themselves to art alone
We are a chosen few we happy idlers
Born to condemn profane utility,
The priests of beauty—and of naught besides,
Aren't we, Salieri?—But I feel unwell
Something oppresses me I'll go and sleep Farewell!

SALIERI Good bye (Alone)

You'll sleep a long sleep Mozart
But was he really right? Am I no genius?
So villainy and genius are two things
That never go together? That's not true
Think but of Buonarroti Or was that A tale of the dull stupid crowd—and he Who built the Vatican was not a murderer?

The Italian composer Antonio Salieri was a bitter enemy of Mozart and indeed was rumored to have caused his death by poison

The mention at the close of Buonarrotti is an allusion to the story that Michelangelo in pursuit of a more realistic art murdered the model for the Christ in his Crucifixion

THE STONE GUEST

EPCORELLO

Don Giovanni

DON JUAN AND LEFORELLO

DON JUAN Here we'll await the night—And so at last We've reached the portals of Madrid and soon
Along the well known streets shall I be fitting Mustache and brows concealed by cloak and hat
What think you? Could I ever be recognized?

LEPORELLO Ah, sure it's hard to recognize Don Juan!
There are so many like him

[illegible]

LEPORELLO Why, the first
Watchman you meet, or gypsy or drunk fiddler
Or your own kind—some saucy cavalier,
With flowing cloak and sword under his arm

DOÑ JUAN What matter if I'm recognized! Provided
I meet not with the king himself I fear
No other soul in all Madrid beside.

LEPORELLO To-morrow it will reach the king's own ear
That Don Juan is in Madrid again
Without authority returned from exile
And then what will he do?

DON JUAN He'll send me back
Dear me they won't cut off my head you know
No crime have I committed 'gainst the State!
He sent me off for very love of me
In order that the murdered man's relations
Might cease to worry me

LEPORELLO Just so just so!
If only you had stayed there quietly!

DON JUAN Your humble servant thanks you for the pleasure!
I all but died of boredom there! What people!
And what a land! The sky? A pall of smoke
The women? Why I never would exchange—
Mark what I say my foolish Leporello—
The humblest peasant girl in Andalusia
For all their leading beauties—that I wouldn't At first indeed these women took my fancy
With their blue eyes and that white skin of theirs
Their modesty—but most their novelty
But thank the Lord I soon had sized them up—
Saw that 'twas sin to deal with them at all
There isn't any life in them—they're all But waxen dolls whereas our girls! But hisl
We seem to know this place you recognize it?

LEPORELLO How could I fail to? I remember well
The convent of S. Anthony You used
To come on visits here and I would hold
The horses in this grove a cursed duty

I do confess! More pleasantly you spent
Your time here than did I, forsooth

DON JUAN (Pennively) Poor Inez!
She is no more! And how I did adore her!

LEPORELLO Inez—the black-eyed girl? Oh, I remember!

For three long months you courted her in vain,
Twas only through the devil's help you won

DON JUAN Twas in July at night I used to find Strange pleasure in her melancholy gaze
And in her ashen lips A curious thing!
But you it seems did not consider her
A beauty And in fact there wasn't much
Of real beauty in her But her eyes
Her eyes alone her glance too such a glance
I never since have met And then her voice
Was soft and weak, as though she were not well
Her husband was a rough and heartless black guard—

I realized too late Alas, poor Inez!

LEPORELLO What of it? On her heels came others

DON JUAN True!

LEPORELLO And if we live there will be others still

DON JUAN Even so

LEPORELLO And now what lady in Madrid
Shall we be seeking out?

DON JUAN Why whom but Laura!
I'm off to show myself to her

LEPORELLO Now that's
The way to talk

LEPORELLO Why of course!
Well now we have recovered our good spirits
It s not for long dead women can disturb us
But who is this that comes our way? (Enter MONK)

LEPORELLO Thank the Lord!
The farther off the better! Would that all

Such rascals in a single sack were sewn
And thrown into the sea

DON JUAN
Is this?

LEPORELLO Be silent twas on purpose I

DON JUAN So here it was they buried the commander?

MOVER. 'Twas here And here his widow did erect
A monument to him and every day
She comes to weep, and pray that God may grant
His soul salvation

DON JUAN What a curious widow!
And is the lady pretty?

MONK Anchorites,
Like us should not be moved by woman's beauty,
But lying is a sin — a saint himself
Must yet admit her wondrous loveliness

DON JUAN The dead man had good reason to be jealous
 He kept this Doña Anna bolted up
 Not one of us e'er caught a glimpse of her
 I'd like to have a talk with her sometime

MOYA. Oh Doña Anna never talks with men.

DON JUAN She talks with you good father doesn't she?

110 A. Oh that's a different matter—I'm a monk
But there she is (Enter DOÑA ANA)

DONA ANNA Come open holy father

MONK I come Senora I was waiting for you
(DONA ANNA follows the MONK.)

LEFORELLO Well what's the like?

DON JUAN There's nothing visible
Of her beneath her somber widow's veil
I just but glimpsed a trim and narrow heel

LEPORELLO That's quite enough for you Imagination
Will in a jiffy sketch you out the rest
Your fancy's quicker than the painter's brush
The starting point is all the same to you--
The forehead or the foot

[illegible]

LEPORELLO (to himself) There you have the man!
That's the last straw! The fellow having killed
The husband now would like to feast his eyes
Upon the widow's tears! The wretch!

DON JUAN But see
The dusk is on us Ere the moon arise
Above us and transform this inky black
Into a glowing twilight let us creep
Into Madrid

LEPORELLO A Spanish nobleman
Like any thief awaits the night—and fears
The moon O Heavens! What a cursed life!
Ah how much longer must I bear with him?
My strength in truth is nearly at an end!

Room Supper at LAURA S

FIRST GUEST I swear to you dear Laura never yet
Was such perfection in your acting shown!
How thoroughly you understood your role!

SECOND GUEST And with what power its meaning you unfolded!

THIRD GUEST And with what art!

LAURA To-day, indeed success
Did crown my every movement, every word
I yielded freely to my inspiration
The words flowed forth as though it was the heart
And not the timid memory gave them birth

FIRST GUEST 'Tis true and even now your eyes are shining
Your cheeks are burning—no your ecstasy
Has not yet faded Laura, let it not Grow cold before it bear some fruit pray Laura,
Do sing us something!

LAURA Give me my guitar (Sings)

ALL Ah brava! brava! Wonderful! Superb!

FIRST GUEST Our thanks enchantress! You have cast a spell
Upon our hearts Among the joys of life,
To love alone does music yield the prize
But love itself is melody Behold
Carlos himself your surly guest is touched!

SECOND GUEST What harmonies! And how much soul therein!
Who wrote the words dear Laura?

LAURA Don Juan

DON CARLOS What? Don Juan?

LAURA Some time or other he
My loyal friend—and fickle lover—wrote them.

DON CARLOS Your Don Juan's an atheist and a rascal
While you you're but a fool

LAURA Have you gone mad?
Grandee of Spain though you may be, I'll bid
My servants cut your throat straightway for this

DON CARLOS (Gets up) Well call them then.

FIRST GUEST No, Laura do not do it
Don Carlos, don't be angered She forgot

LAURA Forgot? That Don Juan in single combat
Quite honorably killed his brother? True,
'Twere better he had killed Don Carlos

DON CARLOS I
Was stupid to get angry

LAURA You admit
That you were stupid—let us make our peace

DON CARLOS Forgive me Laura it was all my fault
But still you know I cannot hear that name
With equanimity

LAURA Am I to blame
If that name's on my tongue at every moment?

GUEST Come Laura as a sign your anger's passed
Sing once again

LAURA I'll sing a good night song
'Tis time—for night has come What shall I sing?
Ah! listen (Sings)

ALL Charming! Matchless! How sublime!

LAURA Good night my friends

GUESTS Good night and thanks, sweet Laura
(They go out LAURA stops DON CARLOS)

LAURA You utter madman you! Remain with me
 You took my fancy, you reminded me
 Of Don Juan, the way you rated me
 And set your teeth and ground them

DON CARLOS Lucky man!
 You loved him then? (LAURA nods) You loved him deeply?

LAURA Deeply

DON CARLOS And do you love him now?

LAURA This very minute?
 Why no I cannot love two men at once
 It's you I love at present

DON CARLOS Tell me Laura How old are you?

LAURA I am eighteen my friend

DON CARLOS O Laura you are young and will be young

For five or six years more Around you men
 Will throng for six years more and shower you
 With flattery with gifts and with caresses,
 Divert you with nocturnal serenades
 And kill each other for you at the cross roads
 By night But when your prime has passed and when

Your eyes are sunken and their puckered lids
 Grow dark and in your tresses gray hairs glint
 And men begin to call you an old woman
 Well what will you say then?

LAURA Ah then But why
 Be thinking now of that? What conversation!
 Or are you always thinking things like that?
 Come out upon the balcony How calm

The sky! The air is still and warm the night
 Is odorous with lemon and with laurel
 The bright moon's shining in the dense dark blue—
 The watchmen's drawn-out cry resounds All's well!

But far away now in the north—in Paris—
 Perhaps the sky is overcast with clouds
 A cold rain's falling and the wind is blowing
 But what is that to us? Now listen Carlos
 I order you to smile at me—That's right

DON CARLOS You fascinating demon! (Knock at door)

DON JUAN Laura ho!

LAURA Who's there? Whose voice is that?

DON JUAN Unlock the door

LAURA Lord! Can it be?
 (Opens the door enter DON JUAN)

DON JUAN Good evening!

LAURA Don Juan!
 (LAURA throws herself on his neck)

DON CARLOS What! Don Juan!

DON JUAN Laura my darling girl!
 (Kisses her)

Whom have you here my Laura?

DON CARLOS It is I—
 Don Carlos

DON JUAN What an unexpected meeting!
 To-morrow I am at your service

DON CARLOS No!
 Not then—at once

LAURA Don Carlos stop I say!
You're in my house not in the public street—
I beg you go away

DON CARLOS (Not listening to her) I'm waiting Well?
Your sword is at your side

DON JUAN Oh if you have No patience very well (They fight)

LAURA Oh! oh! Juan!
(Throws herself on the bed DON CARLOS falls)

DON JUAN Get up my Laura it's all over

LAURA What
Lies there? He's killed? How lovely! In my room!
And what shall I do now you scapegrace, devil?
And how shall I dispose of him?

DON JUAN Perhaps
He's still alive (Examines the body)

LAURA Alive, forsooth! Why look You wretched man! You pierced him through the heart—
No fear you didn't miss! No blood is flowing
From the three-cornered wound nor is he breathing
So what do you say now?

DON JUAN It can't be helped
He asked for it himself

LAURA Ah Don Juan
It's most annoying really Your old tricks!
And yet you're never to blame! Whence come you
now?
How long have you been here?

DOY JUAN I just arrived
And on the quiet—for I've not been pardoned

LAURA And instantly you recollected Laura?
 So far so good But stop! I don't believe you
 You happened to be passing through the street
 And saw my house

DON JUAN No Laura you can ask
 My servant Leporello I am lodging
 Outside the city in a wretched tavern
 For Laura's sake I'm visiting Madrid (Kisses her)

LAURA You are my darling! Stop not right before
 The dead man! Oh, what shall we do with him?

DON JUAN Just leave him here—before the break of day
 I'll take him out enfolded in my cloak
 And place him on the cross roads

LAURA Only look
 That no one sees you 'Twas a stroke of luck
 Your visit was not timed a minute sooner!
 Your friends were supping here with me They just Had left Suppose that you had found them here!

DON JUAN How long my Laura have you loved him

LAURA Whom
 You must be raving

DON JUAN Laura come confess
 How many times you've been unfaithful since My absence?

LAURA What about yourself you scapegrace?

DON JUAN Come tell me No we'll talk about it later!

The Commander's Monument

DON JUAN All's for the best for, having slain Don Carlos

Without intent in humble hermit's guise
 I've taken refuge here—and every day
 I see my charming widow who has noticed Me too I think Until the present we Have stood on formal terms with one another,
 To-day however I shall break the ice
 'Tis time! But how to start? May I presume?
 Or no Senora Bah! whatever comes Into my head I'll say spontaneously
 Like one whose serenade is improvised
 It's time she came Without her I believe
 The poor commander has a tedious time
 They've made him look a very giant here!
 What mighty shoulders! What a Hercules!
 Whereas the man himself was small and puny,
 If he were here and standing on tip toe
 Stretched out his arm he could not reach his nose
 When hard by the Escorial we met
 He ran upon my sword point and expired,
 Just like a dragon fly upon a pin
 But he was proud and fearless—and he had A rugged spirit there she is (Enter DOÑA ANNA)

DOÑA ANNA

Again

He's here O father I've distracted you
 From holy meditations Pardon me

DON JUAN 'Tis I who must beseech your pardon rather Senora for perhaps I am preventing Your grief from flowing freely as it might

DOÑA ANNA No father, for my sorrow is within me
E'en in your presence may my prayers ascend Humbly to Heaven and I beg you join
Your voice with mine

DON JUAN I pray with Doña Anna!
A lot so happy I do not deserve!
These vicious lips of mine will never dare
Repeat your holy supplications I
But from afar with reverence do look
On you when bowing silently you spread
Your raven tresses o'er the pallid marble—
And then it seems to me that secretly
An angel has alighted on this tomb
Within my troubled heart it is not prayers
That I find then I stand in speechless wonder
And think—Oh! happy man whose chilly marble
Is warmed with breath from her celestial lips
And with the tears of her great love bedewed

DONA ANNA Strange words are these!

DON JUAN Señora?

DOÑA ANNA Said to me!
You have forgotten

DON JUAN What? That I am only
A wretched hermit? That my sinful voice
Should not resound so loudly in this place?

DONA ANNA It seemed to me I did not under stand

DON JUAN Aha! I see you have discovered all!

DONA ANNA I have discovered! What?

DON JUAN That I m no monk
And at your feet I humbly beg your pardon

DOÑA ANNA O Heavens! Pray get up! Who are you then?

DON JUAN Unhappy victim of a hopeless passion!

DONA ANNA O God in Heaven! Here before this tomb!
Begone!

DON JUAN A minute Doña Anna, pray
A single minute!

DONA ANNA But if someone comes!

DON JUAN The gate is locked A single minute pray!

DOÑA ANNA Well come! What is it that you wish for?

DON JUAN Death!

Oh let me die this instant at your feet
And let my hapless dust be buried here,
Not near the dust of him who's dear to you
Not on this spot—not near—but some way off,
There—at the very threshold—at the gate,
That there in passing you might touch my grave
With your light foot or with your garment's hem
Whenever you come to bow your curly head
Upon this haughty monument and weep

DOÑA ANNA You've surely lost your senses

DON JUAN Dona Anna

To wish for death—is that a sign of madness?
Were I a madman then would I be fain
To stay among the living I'd have hope
Some day to touch your heart with tender love
Were I a madman I would spend the nights
I'd bow your window and disturb your sleep
With serenades I would not hide myself
But on the contrary I'd strive to be Observed by you wherever I might go

Were I a madman I'd refuse to suffer
In silence

DONNA ANNA So you call this silence then?

DON JUAN Chance Dona Anna carried me away
For otherwise you never would have learned
Of this the gloomy secret of my heart

DONA ANNA And have you then been long in love with me?

DON JUAN How long I've been in love I do not know
But only since that hour I've known the value
Of this brief life yes only since that hour
I've understood what happiness could mean

DONA ANNA Begone! Begone! You are a dangerous man

DON JUAN Dangerous! How?

DONA ANNA I fear to listen to you

DON JUAN Then I'll be silent only do not send Away the man to whom the sight of you
Is all the consolation he has left
I do not entertain audacious hopes Make no demands upon you but I must,
If I am still condemned to live have leave
To see you

DONA ANNA Go—for this is not the place
For words like these for madness such as this
To-morrow come to where I live if you
Will swear to keep within respectful bounds
I shall receive you—in the evening later
E'er since the hour that I became a widow
I have not seen a soul

Addressed to you a gracious word or two Or you bestowed on her your blessing

DON JUAN No

My Leporello no! An assignation
An assignation has she granted me!

LEPORELLO Can it be so? O widows you are all
The same

DON JUAN Oh what a happy man am I!
I'm ready to embrace the world—or sing!

LEPORELLO And what will the commander have to say About all this?

DON JUAN You think he will be jealous?
No truly he's a man of common sense
And surely has grown meeker since he died

LEPORELLO No see his statue there

DON JUAN Well what?

LEPORELLO It seems
As though it's looking at you angrily

DON JUAN My Leporello here's a notion go
And bid it come to-morrow to my house—
No not to mine—I mean to Dona Anna's

LEPORELLO Invite the statue! Why?

DON JUAN Well certainly Not for the purpose of conversing with it
But bid the statue come to Dona Anna's
To-morrow evening, rather late and stand
On guard before the door

LEPORELLO Here's an odd way
To jest! And jest with whom!

DON JUAN

Go on!

LEPORELLO

But

DON JUAN

Go!

LEPORELLO Most excellent and beautiful of statues!

My master Don Juan, most humbly bids

You come Good Lord I cannot, I'm afraid

DON JUAN Coward! I'll give it to you!

LEPORELLO

Very well!

My master Don Juan, doth bid you come

To-morrow rather late to your wife's house

And guard the door

(The statue nods)

Oh!

DON JUAN

What's the matter there?

LEPORELLO Oh! Oh! Oh! Oh! I'll die!

DON JUAN

Whatever's happened?

LEPORELLO (Nodding) The statue Oh!

DON JUAN

What's this you're doing—bowing

LEPORELLO No no not I—but it!

DON JUAN

What fiddle faddle

Is this?

LEPORELLO Then go yourself

DON JUAN

Well look you knave!

(To the statue) Commander, I do herewith bid you come

Unto your widow's house, where I shall be

To-morrow and keep watch before the door

Well? Will you?

(Statue nods again)

God!

LEPORELLO

I told you

DON JUAN

Let us go

SCENE IV

DOÑA ANNA'S Room DON JUAN and DOÑA ANNA

DOÑA ANNA Don Diego, I've received you yet I fear
My melancholy conversation will Soon bore you wretched widow that I am
I never can forget my loss Like April
I mingle tears with smiles But tell me why
Are you so silent?

DON JUAN I'm enjoying deeply
And silently the thought that I'm alone
With charming Doña Anna—here not there
Beside that lucky dead man's monument—
And see you now no longer on your knees
Before your marble spouse

DOÑA ANNA Don Diego are You jealous then? My husband tortures you
Even in his grave?

DON JUAN I ought not to be jealous
For he was your own choice

DOÑA ANNA Oh no my mother
Commanded me to marry Don Alvaro
For we were poor and Don Alvaro rich

DON JUAN The lucky man! He brought but empty treasures
To set before a goddess feet for that He tasted all the bliss of paradise
If I had known you first with utter rapture

I'd have bestowed on you my rank, my wealth,
 All everything for but one gentle glance!
 Your slave I would have held your wishes sacred;
 I would have studied all your whims that I Might then anticipate them that your life
 Might be one long enchantment without end!
 Alas! fate has decreed quite otherwise!

DOÑA ANNA Ah Diego, stop! 'Tis wrong of me to listen
 To you—it is forbidden me to love you
 E'en to the grave a widow must be faithful
 If only you could know how Don Alvaro
 Did love me! Oh, 'tis certain Don Alvaro,
 Had he been left a widower had ne'er
 Received into his house a lovelorn lady
 He would have kept his faith with spousal love

DON JUAN O Doña Anna torture not my heart
 With everlasting mention of your spouse
 Pray cease from your chastisement although I Perhaps deserve chastisement

DOÑA ANNA And pray how?
 You are not bound, I think, by holy ties
 To anyone? In loving me you do
 No wrong in Heaven's eyes or mine

DON JUAN In yours!
 O God!

DOÑA ANNA It isn't possible you're guilty
 Of any wrong to me? Or tell me how?

DON JUAN No never!

DOÑA ANNA Diego tell me what you mean!
 You've done me wrong? But tell me how and when?

DON JUAN No not for worlds!

DOÑA ANNA But Diego this is strange!
I ask you I demand of you

DON JUAN No no!

DOÑA ANNA So this is being docile to my will!
But what was that you said to me just now?
That you would like to be my very slave
I'm getting angry Diego answer me,
In what way have you wronged me?

DON JUAN No, I dare
Not tell you'd never want to look on me
You'd fall to hating me

DONA ANNA No e'en beforehand
I pardon you, I only want to know

DON JUAN Do not desire to know this terrible
This deadly secret

DOÑA ANNA Deadly! I'm in torment
I'm full of curiosity—what is it?
I didn't know you—how could you offend me?
I have no enemies, and never had
The only one is he who slew my husband

DON JUAN (To himself) The denouement approaches!
—Tell me now
Did you e'er know the wretched Don Juan?

DONA ANNA I never in my life set eyes on him

DON JUAN But in your heart you bear him enmity?

DOÑA ANNA As honor binds me But you're trying now,
Don Diego to divert me from my question—
I ask

DON JUAN Suppose that you should meet Don Juan?

DOÑA ANNA I'd plunge a dagger in the villain's heart.

DON JUAN Where is your dagger, Doña Anna? Here's My breast

DOÑA ANNA O Diego! What is that you say?

DON JUAN No Diego I—my name's Juan

DOÑA ANNA O God!
No no it cannot be I don't believe

DON JUAN I'm Don Juan

DOÑA ANNA It isn't true

DON JUAN I killed
Your husband and have no regrets for that—
There is no trace of penitence within me

DOÑA ANNA What do I hear? No, no it cannot be

DON JUAN I'm Don Juan and I do love you

DOÑA ANNA (Falling) Where Where am I? Where? I'm fainting!

DON JUAN God in Heaven!
What's happened to her? Doña Anna what's The matter with you? Come, wake up wake up
And pull yourself together at your feet
Your slave your Diego kneels

DOÑA ANNA Leave me alone
(Weakly) You are my enemy—you took away
From me all all that in my life

DON JUAN Dear creature!
I'm ready now to expiate that blow
I only wait your order at your feet
Command—I'll die command—and I shall breathe
For you alone

DONA ANNA

So this is Don Juan?

DON JUAN *True is it not he's been described to you
As an outrageous villain and a monster
O Dona Anna rumor is perhaps Not wholly wrong upon my weary conscience
There weighs perhaps a heavy load of evil
I've long been an adept in lechery
But since I saw you first all that has changed
It seems to me that I've been born anew!
For loving you virtue herself I love—
And humbly for the first time in my life
Before her now I bend my trembling knees*

DONNA ANNA *Yes Don Juan is eloquent—I know!
I've heard them say he is a sly seducer
A very fiend How many wretched women
Have you destroyed?*

DON JUAN *Not one of them till now
Was I in love with*

DONNA ANNA *And shall I believe That Don Juan at last has fallen in love
That I am not another of his victims!*

DON JUAN *If I had wished to dupe you do you think
I would have thus avowed the truth or uttered
That name that you can hardly bear to hear?
What do you see of trick or craft in that?*

DONNA ANNA *Who knows your heart? But how could you come here?
For anyone might recognize you here—
And then your death would be inevitable*

DON JUAN *Ah what is death? For one sweet moment's tryst
I'd give my life without a murmur*

DOÑA ANNA

How

Will you escape from here imprudent man?

DON JUAN (Kissing her hand) And so you are concerned about the lifeOf poor Juan! Then in your heavenly soul
There is not any hatred, Doña Anna?DOÑA ANNA Alas! if only I knew how to hate you!
But we must part

DON JUAN

When shall we meet again?

DOÑA ANNA I do not know Some time

DON JUAN

To-morrow?

Where?

DON JUAN Here

DOÑA ANNA O Don Juan, how weak a heart is mine!

DON JUAN A quiet kiss in token of forgiveness

DOÑA ANNA It's time to go

Just one cold quiet kiss

DOÑA ANNA Oh how importunate you are! Well there!
(A knock at the door)

What is that knock I hear? Oh hide Don Juan!

DON JUAN Good bye, until we meet again my darling (Goes out and runs in again)

Oh!

DOÑA ANNA What's the matter? Oh!

(Enter the STATUE of the commander DOÑA ANNA falls)

STATUE.

Your call I've answered.

DON JUAN O God! O Doña Anna!

STATUE Let her be All's over You are trembling Don Juan

DON JUAN I? No! I bade you come I'm glad to see you

STATUE Give me your hand

DON JUAN Here, take it Oh how heavy
The pressure of his cold and stony hand!
Release me let me go let go my hand!
I'm perishing—all's over—Doña Anna!

(They sink into the ground)

The Tales of the Late IVAN PETROVITCH BELKIN

The Mirror

EDITOR'S FOREWORD

HAVING undertaken to arrange the publication of the Tales of I. P. Belkin which are here offered to the public we wished to add to these a biography however brief of the late author and thereby satisfy at least partly the just curiosity of lovers of native letters. To that end we addressed ourselves to Marya Alexeyevna Trafilina the heiress of Ivan Petrovich Belkin and his nearest of kin but unfortunately it was impossible for her to furnish any intelligence concerning him inasmuch as she had never known him deceased. She advised us to confer on the matter with an esteemed person who had been a friend of Ivan Petrovich. We followed this advice, and our inquiries elicited the following answer. We present it here without any changes or explanatory notes as a preface to timony to a noble manner of thinking and a touching friendship, and at the same time as a sufficient biographical account

— — —, Esq

My dear sir!

On the twenty third of this month I had the honor of receiving your most esteemed letter of the fifteenth, in which you express your desire to secure detailed information regarding the dates of birth and death the career in the service the domestic circumstances as well as the occupations and the character of the late Ivan Petrovich Belkin my late good friend and neighbor I take great pleasure in complying with your request and I am here setting forth, my dear sir, all that I can recall of our talks and my own observations

Ivan Petrovich Belkin was born of honorable and noble parents in the year 1798 in the village of Goryukhino His late father, second major Piotr Ivanovich Belkin was married to Pelageya Gavrilovna nee Trifilina He was a man of moderate means, modest habits very shrewd in business matters Their son received his elementary education from a village beadle To this esteemed man he owed it would seem his interest in reading and in Russian letters In 1815 he entered the service in a Jaeger regiment of the infantry (I do not remember the number) in which he remained until the year 1823 The deaths of his parents, which occurred almost simultaneously caused him to retire and settle at Goryukhino his family estate

Having undertaken the management of the estate Ivan Petrovich because of his inexperience and soft heartedness soon began to neglect his property and relaxed the strict regime established by his late parent. Having dismissed the punctual and efficient steward with whom his peasants (as is their habit) were di satisfied he placed the management of the village in the hands of his old housekeeper who had acquired his confidence through her ability to tell stories. This stupid old woman could not tell a twenty five rubl from a fifty ruble note. She was god mother to the children of all the peasants and so the latter were not in fear of her. The steward they had elected indulged them to such an extent at the same time defrauding the master that Ivan Petrovich was forced to abolish the corvec and introduce a very moderate quit rent. Even then the peasants taking advantage of his weakness obtained a special privilege the first year and during the next two years paid more than two-thirds of the quit rent in nuts huckleberries and the like and even so they were in arrear.

Having been a friend of Ivan Petrovich's late parent I deemed it my duty to offer my advice to the son too and repeatedly I volunteered to restore the order he had allowed to fall into decay. To that end having come to see him one day I demanded the account books summoned the rascally steward and in the presence of Ivan Petrovich started examining them. At first the young master followed me with all possible attention and diligence but after we had ascertained from the accounts that in the last two years the number of peasants had increased while the quantity of fowls and cattle had considerably diminished Ivan Petrovich was satisfied with this bit of information and no longer listened to me, and at the very moment when my investigation and strict questioning had reduced the thievish steward to extreme embarrassment and indeed forced him to complete silence to my extreme mortification I heard Ivan Petrovich snoring loudly in his chair. Thenceforward I ceased to intervene in his business affairs and entrusted them (as he did himself) to the care of the Almighty.

This, however, did not injure our friendly relations to any degree for commiserating as I did his weakness and the ruinous negligence common to all our young noblemen, I sincerely loved Ivan Petrovich. It was indeed impossible not to like a young man so gentle and honorable. On his part Ivan Petrovich showed respect to my years and was cordially attached to me. Until his very end he saw me nearly every day, prizing my simple conversation although we did not resemble each other in habits or manner of thinking or character.

Ivan Petrovich lived in the most moderate fashion and avoided excesses of any sort. I never chanced to see him tipsy (which in our parts may be accounted an unheard-of miracle) he had a strong leaning toward the female sex but he was truly as bashful as a girl.¹

Besides the tales which you are pleased to mention in your letter Ivan Petrovich left many manuscripts, some of which are in my hands the rest having been put by his housekeeper to various domestic uses. Thus last winter all the windows in her own wing were pasted over with the first part of the novel which he did not complete. The above mentioned tales were, it seems his first effort. As Ivan Petrovich said, they are for the most part true stories which he had heard from various persons.² But the names in them were almost all his own invention while the names of the villages and hamlets were taken from our neighbor

Follows an anecdote which we do not give, deeming it superfluous. We assure the reader however that it contains nothing prejudicial to the memory of Ivan Petrovich Belkin.

Indeed in Mr. Belkin's manuscript there is an inscription in the author's hand over each tale. Heard by me from such and such a person (follow rank or title and initials of name and surname). We quote for the curious student "The Postmaster" was told to him by Fyodor Counsellor A. G. N. "The Shot" by Larion tenant I. L. P., "The Undertaker" by B. V., shop assistant, "The Snow Storm" and "Mistress into Maid" by Miss K. I. T.

hood for which reason my village too is mentioned somewhere. This happened not because of any malicious design but solely through lack of imagination.

In the autumn of 1828 Ivan Petrovich came down with a catarrhal fever which took a bad turn so that he died in spite of the tireless efforts of our district doctor a man very skillful particularly in the treatment of inveterate diseases such as bunions and the like. He died in my arms in the thirtieth year of his life, and was buried near his deceased parents in the churchyard of the village of Goryukhino.

Ivan Petrovich was of middle height had gray eyes blond hair a straight nose his complexion was fair and his face lean.

Here, my dear sir is all I can recall regarding the manner of life, the occupations the character and the appearance of my late neighbor and friend. In case you should think fit to make some use of my letter I respectfully beg you not to mention my name for much as I esteem and admire authors I deem it superfluous and indeed at my age unseemly to enter their ranks.

With every expression of sincere esteem believe me etc.

The village of Nenaradovo

Considering it our duty to respect the wish of our author's esteemed friend we signalize our deepest gratitude to him for the intelligence furnished by him and trust that the public will appreciate his candor and good nature.

A P

at faro. For a long time he refused, as he hardly ever played; but at last he ordered cards to be brought, placed half a hundred gold coins upon the table, and sat down to deal. We took our places around him, and the game began. It was Silvio's custom to preserve complete silence when playing. He never argued and never entered into explanations. If the punter made a mistake in calculating, he immediately paid him the difference or noted down the surplus. We were acquainted with this habit of his, and we always allowed him to have his own way; but among us on this occasion was an officer who had only recently been transferred to our regiment. During the course of the game this officer absently scored one point too many. Silvio took the chalk and noted down the correct account according to his usual custom. The officers, thinking that he had made a mistake, began to enter into explanations. Silvio continued dealing in silence. The officer, losing patience, took the brush and rubbed out what he considered an error. Silvio took the chalk and corrected the score again. The officer, heated with wine, play, and the laughter of his comrades, considered himself grossly insulted, and in his rage he seized a brass candlestick from the table and hurled it at Silvio, who barely succeeded in avoiding the missile. We were filled with consternation. Silvio rose, white with rage, and with gleaming eyes said:

My dear sir, have the goodness to withdraw, and thank God that this has happened in my house.

None of us entertained the slightest doubt as to what the result would be, and we already looked upon our now comrade as a dead man. The officer withdrew, saying that he was ready to answer for his offense in whatever way the banker liked. The play went on for a few minutes longer, but feeling that our host was too overwrought to care for the game, we withdrew.

one after the other and repaired to our respective quarters after having exchanged a few words upon the probability of there soon being a vacancy in the regiment.

The next day at the riding school we were already asking each other if the poor lieutenant was still alive when he himself appeared among us. We put the same question to him and he replied that he had not yet heard from Silvio. This astonished us. We went to Silvio's house and found him in the courtyard shooting bullet after bullet into an ace pasted upon the gate. He received us as usual but did not utter a word about the event of the previous evening. Three days passed and the lieutenant was still alive. We asked each other in astonishment. Can it be possible that Silvio is not going to fight?

Silvio did not fight. He was satisfied with a very lame explanation and made peace with his assailant.

This lowered him very much in the opinion of all our young fellows. Want of courage is the last thing to be pardoned by young men who usually look upon bravery as the chief of all human virtues and the excuse for every possible fault. But by degrees every thing was forgotten and Silvio regained his former influence.

I alone could not approach him on the old footing. Being endowed by nature with a romantic imagination I had become attached more than all the others to the man whose life was an enigma and who seemed to me the hero of some mysterious tale. He was fond of me at least with me alone did he drop his customary sarcastic tone and converse on different subjects in a simple and unusually agreeable manner. But after this unlucky evening the thought that his honor had been tarnished and that the stain had been allowed to remain upon it through his own fault, was ever present in my mind and prevented me from treating him as before. I was ashamed to look at him. Silvio was too intelligent and experienced not to observe this and guess the cause of it. This seemed to vex him at least. I observed once or twice a desire on his part to enter into an explanation with me but I avoided such opportunities and Silvio gave up the attempt. From that time forward I saw him only in the presence of my comrades and our former confidential conversations came to an end.

Those who live amidst the excitements of the capital have no idea of the many experiences familiar to the inhabitants of villages and small towns as, for instance, waiting for the arrival of the post. On Tuesdays and Fridays our regimental bureau used to be filled with officers some expecting money some letters, and others newspapers. The packets were usually opened on the spot items of news were communicated from one to another and the bureau used to present a very animated picture. Silvio used to have his letters addressed to our regiment and he was generally there to receive them.

One day he received a letter the seal of which he broke with a look of the greatest impatience. As he read the contents his eyes sparkled. The officers each occupied with his own mail did not observe anything.

Gentlemen said Silvio circumstances demand my immediate departure. I leave tonight. I hope that you will not refuse to dine with me for the last time. I shall expect you too he added turning toward me. I shall expect you without fail.

With these words he hastily departed and we, after agreeing to meet at Silvio's, dispersed to our various quarters.

I arrived at Silvio's house at the appointed time and found nearly the whole regiment there. All his belongings were already packed nothing remained but the bare bullet riddled walls We sat down to table Our host was in an excellent humor and his gaiety was quickly communicated to the rest Corks popped every moment glasses foamed incessantly and with the utmost warmth we wished our departing friend a pleasant journey and every happiness When we rose from the table it was already late in the evening After having wished everybody good bye Silvio took me by the hand and detained me just at the moment when I was preparing to depart

I want to speak to you he said in a low voice

I stopped behind

The guests had departed and we two were left alone Sitting down opposite each other we silently lit our pipes Silvio seemed greatly troubled not a trace remained of his former feverish gaiety The intense pallor of his face his sparkling eyes and the thick smoke issuing from his mouth gave him a truly diabolical appearance Several minutes elapsed and then Silvio broke the silence

Perhaps we shall never see each other again said he before we part I should like to have an explanation with you You may have observed that I care very little for the opinion of other people but I like you and I feel that it would be painful to me to leave you with a wrong impression upon your mind

He paused and began to refill his pipe I sat gazing silently at the floor

You thought it strange he continued that I did not demand satisfaction from that drunken idiot R—— You will admit however that since I had the choice of weapons his life was in my hands while my own was in no great danger I could ascribe my forbearance to generosity alone but I will not tell a lie If I could have chastised R—— without the least risk to my own life I should never have pardoned him

I looked at Silvio with astonishment. Such a confession completely astounded me. Silvio continued:

Exactly so. I have no right to expose myself to death. Six years ago I received a slap in the face and my enemy still lives.

My curiosity was greatly excited.

Did you not fight with him? I asked. Circumstances probably separated you.

"I did fight with him," replied Silvio, "and here is a souvenir of our duel."

Silvio rose and took from a cardboard box a red cap with a gold tassel and galloon (what the French call a bonnet de police). He put it on—a bullet had passed through it about an inch above the forehead.

You know," continued Silvio, "that I served in one of the Hussar regiments. My character is well known to you. I am accustomed to taking the lead. From my youth this has been my passion. In our time dissoluteness was the fashion, and I was the wildest man in the army. We used to boast of our drunkenness. I outdrank the famous B—— of whom D. D—— has sung. In our regiment duels were constantly taking place, and in all of them I was either second or principal. My comrades adored me, while the regimental commanders, who were constantly being changed, looked upon me as a necessary evil.

I was calmly, or rather boisterously, enjoying my reputation, when a young man belonging to a wealthy and distinguished family—I will not mention his name—joined our regiment. Never in my life have I met with such a fortunate fellow! Imagine to yourself youth, wit, beauty, unbounded gaiety, the most reckless bravery, a famous name, untold wealth—imagine all these, and you can form some idea of the effect that he would be sure to produce among us. My supremacy was shaken. Dazzled by my reputation he began to seek my friendship but I received him coldly and without the least regret he held aloof from me. I began to hate him. His success in the regiment and in the society of ladies brought me to the verge of despair. I began to seek a quarrel with him to my epigrams he replied with epigrams which always seemed to me more spontaneous and more cutting than mine and which were decidedly more amusing for he joked while I fumed. At last at a ball given by a Polish landed proprietor seeing him the object of the attention of all the ladies and especially of the mistress of the house, with whom I was having a liaison I whispered some grossly insulting remark in his ear. He flamed up and gave me a slap in the face. We grasped our swords the ladies fainted we were separated and that same night we set out to fight.

"The dawn was just breaking. I was standing at the appointed place with my three seconds. With indescribable impatience I awaited my opponent. The spring sun rose, and it was already growing hot. I saw him coming in the distance. He was on foot, in uniform, wearing his sword and was accompanied by one second. We advanced to meet him. He approached holding his cap filled with black cherries. The seconds measured twelve paces for us. I had to fire first, but my agitation was so great, that I could not depend upon the steadiness of my hand and in order to give myself time to become calm I ceded to him the first shot. My adversary would not agree to this. It was decided that we should cast lots. The first number fell to him, the constant favorite of fortune. He took aim and his bullet went through my cap. It was now my turn. His life at last was in my hands. I looked at him eagerly endeavoring to detect if only the faintest shadow of uneasiness. But he stood in front of my pistol, picking out the ripest cherries from his cap and spitting out the stones which flew almost as far as my feet. His indifference enraged me beyond measure. What is the use, thought I, of depriving him of life when he attaches no value whatever to it? A malicious thought flashed through my mind. I lowered my pistol.

You don't seem to be ready for death just at present, I said to him. you wish to have your breakfast. I do not wish to hinder you.

You are not hindering me in the least, he replied. Have the goodness to fire, or just as you please—you owe me a shot. I shall always be at your service.

I turned to the seconds, informing them that I had no intention of firing that day, and with that the duel came to an end.

I resigned my commission and retired to this little place. Since then, not a day has passed that I have not thought of revenge. And now my hour has arrived."

Silvio took from his pocket the letter that he had received that morning, and gave it to me to read. Some one (it seemed to be his business agent) wrote to him from Moscow, that a certain person was going to be married to a young and beautiful girl.

You can guess, said Silvio, who the certain person is. I am going to Moscow. We shall see if he will look death in the face with as much indifference now, when he is on the eve of being married, as he did once when he was eating cherries!

With these words Silvio rose, threw his cap upon the floor, and began pacing up and down the room like a tiger in his cage. I had listened to him in silence. Strange conflicting feelings agitated me.

The servant entered and announced that the horses were ready. Silvio grasped my hand tightly, and we embraced each other. He seated himself in the carriage in which there were two suitcases—one containing his pistols, the other his effects. We said good bye once more, and the horses galloped off.

II

SEVERAL years passed, and family circumstances compelled me to settle in a poor little village of the N—— district. Occupied with farming, I continued to sigh in secret for my former active and carefree life. The most difficult thing of all was having to accustom myself to passing the spring and winter evenings in perfect solitude. Until the hour for dinner I managed to pass away the time somehow or other, talking with the bailiff, riding about to inspect the work, or going round to look at the new buildings; but as soon as it began to get dark, I positively did not know what to do with myself. The few books that I had found in the cupboards and store rooms I already knew by heart. All the stories that my housekeeper, Kirilovna, could remember I had heard over and over again. The songs of the peasant women made me feel depressed. I tried drinking spirits, but it made my head ache, and more over I confess I was afraid of becoming a drunkard from mere chagrin, that is to say, the saddest kind of drunkard, of which I had seen many examples in our district. I had no near neighbors except two or three toppers, whose conversation consisted for the most part of hiccups and sighs. Solitude was preferable to their society.

Four versts from my house there was a rich estate belonging to the Countess B——, but nobody lived there except the steward. The Countess had only visited her estate once, during the first year of her married life and then she had remained there only a month. But in the second spring of my secluded life, a report was circulated that the Countess with her husband, was coming to spend the summer on her estate. In deed they arrived at the beginning of June.

The arrival of a rich neighbor is an important event in the lives of country people. The landed proprietors and the people of their household talk about it for two months beforehand and for three years afterwards. As for me, I must confess that the news of the arrival of a young and beautiful neighbor affected me strongly. I burned with impatience to see her and the first Sunday after her arrival I set out after dinner for the village of A—— to pay my respects to the Countess and her husband, as their nearest neighbor and most humble servant.

A lackey conducted me into the Count's study, and then went to announce me. The spacious room was furnished with every possible luxury. The walls were lined with bookcases each surmounted by a bronze bust. Over the marble mantelpiece was a large mirror. On the floor was a green cloth covered with carpets. Unaccustomed to luxury in my own poor corner and not having seen the wealth of other people for a long time I waited the appearance of the Count with some little trepidation, as a suppliant from the provinces awaits the entrance of the minister. The door opened and a handsome looking man of about thirty-two entered the room. The Count approached me with a frank and friendly air. I tried to be self possessed and began to introduce myself, but he anticipated me. We sat down. His conversation, which was easy and agreeable soon dissipated my awkward bashfulness and I was already beginning to recover my usual composure when the Countess suddenly entered and I became more confused than ever. She was indeed beautiful.

The Count presented me I wished to appear at ease but the more I tried to assume an air of unconstraint the more awkward I felt In order to give me time to recover myself and to become accustomed to my new acquaintances they began to talk to each other treating me as a good neighbor and without ceremony Meanwhile, I walked about the room examining the books and pictures I am no judge of pictures but one of them attracted my attention It represented some view in Switzerland but it was not the painting that struck me but the circumstance that the canvas was shot through by two bullets one planted just above the other

A good shot that! said I turning to the Count

Yes replied he a very remarkable shot D you shoot well? he continued

Tolerably I replied rejoicing that the conversation had turned at last upon a subject that was familiar to me At thirty paces I can manage to hit a card without fail—I mean of course with a pistol that I am used to Really? said the Countess with a look of the greatest interest And you my dear could you hit a card at thirty paces?

Some day replied the Count, we will try In my time I did not shoot badly but it is now four years since I touched a pistol

Oh! I observed in that case, I don't mind laying a wager that Your Excellency will not hit the card at twenty paces the pistol demands daily practice I know that from experience In our regiment I was reckoned one of the best shots It once happened that I did not touch a pistol for a whole month as I had sent mine to be mended and would you believe it Your Excellency the first time I began to shoot again I missed a bottle four times in succession at twenty paces! Our captain a witty and amusing fellow happened to be standing by and he said to me It is evident, my friend, that you will not lift your hand against the bottle No, Your Excellency, you must not neglect to practice, or your hand will soon lose its cunning The best shot that I ever met used to shoot at least three times every day before dinner It was as much his custom to do this as it was to drink his daily glass of brandy

The Count and Countess seemed pleased that I had begun to talk

And what sort of a shot was he? asked the Count

Well it was thus way with him Your Excellency if he saw a fly settle on the wall—you smile Countess, but before Heaven it is the truth—if he saw a fly he would call out Kuzka my pistol! Kuzka would bring him a loaded pistol—bang! and the fly would be crushed against the wall

Wonderful! said the Count And what was his name?

Silvio Your Excellency

Silvio! exclaimed the Count starting up Did you know Silvio?

How could I help knowing him Your Excellency we were intimate friends he was received in our regiment like a brother officer but it is now five years since I had any news of him Then Your Excellency also knew him?

Oh yes I knew him very well Did he ever tell you of one very strange incident in his life?

Dr— Your Excellency refer to the slap in the face that he received from some scamp at a ball?"

Did he tell you the name of this scamp?

No, Your Excellency he never mentioned his name Ah! Your Excellency! I continued guessing the truth—pardon me—I did not know could it have been you?

Yes I myself—replied the Count with a look of extraordinary distress—and that picture with a bullet through it is a memento of our last meeting.

Ah my dear—said the Countess—for Heaven's sake do not speak about that—it would be too terrible for me to listen to.

No—replied the Count—I will relate everything. He knows how I insulted his friend—and it is only right that he should know how Silvio revenged himself.

The Count pushed a chair towards me—and with the liveliest interest I listened to the following story.

Five years ago I got married. The first month—the honeymoon—I spent here in this village. To this house I am indebted for the happiest moments of my life, as well as for one of its most painful recollections.

One evening we went out together for a ride on horseback. My wife's horse became restive—she grew frightened—gave the reins to me—and returned home on foot. I rode on before. In the courtyard I saw a traveling carriage—and I was told that in my study sat waiting for me a man who would not give his name—but who merely said that he had business with me. I entered the room and saw in the darkness a man covered with dust and wearing a beard of several days' growth. He was standing there near the fireplace. I approached him trying to remember his features.

You do not recognize me Count? said he in a quivering voice.

Silvio! I cried—and I confess that I felt as if my hair had suddenly stood on end.

Exactly—continued he—There is a shot due me—and I have come to discharge my pistol. Are you ready?

His pistol protruded from a side pocket I measured twelve paces and took my stand there in that corner begging him to fire quickly, before my wife arrived. He hesitated, and asked for a light. Candies were brought in. I closed the doors gave orders that nobody was to enter and again begged him to fire. He drew out his pistol and took aim. I counted the seconds.

I thought of her. A terrible minute passed! Silvio lowered his hand.

I regret, said he that the pistol is not loaded with cherry stones the bullet is heavy. It seems to me that this is not a duel but a murder. I am not accustomed to taking aim at unarmed men. Let us begin all over again we will cast lots as to who shall fire first.

My head went round. I think I raised some objection. At last we loaded another pistol and rolled up two pieces of paper. He placed these under his cap—the same through which I had once sent a bullet—and again I drew the first number.

You are devilishly lucky. Count said he with a smile that I shall never forget.

I don't know what was the matter with me or how it was that he managed to make me do it. But I fired and hit that picture.

The Count pointed with his finger to the perforated picture his face burned like fire the Countess was whiter than her own handkerchief, and I could not restrain an exclamation.

I fired continued the Count and thank Heaven missed my aim. Then Silvio at that moment he was really terrible. Silvio raised his hand to take aim at me. Suddenly the door opens Masha rushes into the room and with a shriek throws herself upon my neck. Her presence restored to me all my courage.

My dear said I to her, don't you see that we are joking. How frightened you are! Go and drink a glass of water and then come back to us I will introduce you to an old friend and comrade

Masha still doubted

Tell me is my husband speaking the truth? said she turning to the terrible Silvio is it true that you are only joking?

He is always joking Countess replied Silvio once he gave me a slap in the face in jest on another occasion he sent a bullet through my cap in jest and just now when he fired at me and missed me it was all in jest And now I feel inclined to have a joke

With these words he raised his pistol to take aim at me—right before her! Masha threw herself at his feet

Rise Masha are you not ashamed! I cried in a rage and you sir will you stop making fun of a poor woman? Will you fire or not?

I will not replied Silvio I am satisfied I have seen your confusion your alarm I forced you to fire at me That is sufficient You will remember me I leave you to your conscience

Then he turned to go but passing in the doorway and looking at the picture that my shot had passed through he fired at it almost without taking aim and disappeared My wife had fainted away the servants did not venture to stop him the mere look of him filled them with terror He went out upon the step called his coachman and drove off before I could recover myself

The Count fell silent In this way I learned the end of the story whose beginning had once made such a deep impression upon me The hero of it I never saw again It is said that Silvio commanded a detachment of hussars during the revolt under Alexander Ypsilanti and that he was killed in the battle of Slivian!

THE SNOWSTORM

*Horses dash across the slopes
Trampling snow deep drifted
By the wayside stands a church
Lonely cross uplifted*

*Suddenly a snowstorm flings
Tufted flakes about us
O'er the sledge with whistling wing
Flies a crow to flout us
Weird his cry foreboding grief
Gathering their forces
Manes upraised toward the dark
Peer the speeding horses*

Zhukovsky

TOWARD the end of the year 1811, a memorable period for us the good Gavril Gavrilovich R— was living on his estate of Nenaradovo. He was celebrated throughout the district for his hospitality and kindheartedness. The neighbors were constantly visiting him, some to eat and drink, some to play Poston at five copecks with his wife Praskovya Petrovna, and some to look at their daughter Marya Gavrilovna, a pale slender girl of seventeen. She was considered wealthy, and many desired her for themselves or for their sons.

Marya Gavrilovna had been brought up on French novels and consequently was in love. The object of her choice was a poor sub lieutenant who was then on leave of absence in his village. It need scarcely be mentioned that the young man returned her passion with equal ardor and that the parents of his beloved one observing their mutual inclination forbade their daughter to think of him and gave him a worse reception than if he were a retired assessor.

Our lovers corresponded with each other and daily saw each other alone in the little pine wood or near the old chapel. There they exchanged vows of eternal love, lamented their cruel fate and formed various plans. Corresponding and conversing in this way, they arrived quite naturally at the following conclusion:

If we cannot exist without each other and the will of hard-hearted parents stands in the way of our happiness, why cannot we do without their consent?

Needless to mention that this happy idea originated in the mind of the young man and that it was very congenial to the romantic imagination of Marya Gavrilovna.

The winter came and put a stop to their meetings but their correspondence became all the more active. Vladimir Nikolayevich in every letter implored her to give herself up to him, to get married secretly, to hide for some time and then throw themselves at the feet of their parents, who would without any doubt be touched at last by the heroic constancy and unhappiness of the lovers and would assuredly say to them:

Children, come to our arms!

Marya Gavrilovna hesitated for a long time, and many plans for elopement were rejected. At last he consented on the appointed day she was not to take supper but was to retire to her room under the pretext of a headache. Her maid was in the plot: they were both to go into the garden by the back stairs and behind the garden they would find ready a sledge into which they were to get and then drive straight to the church.

of Zhadrino a village about five versts from Nenara dove where Vladimir would be waiting for them

On the eve of the decisive day, Marva Gavrilovna did not sleep the whole night she packed and tied up her linen and other articles of apparel wrote a long letter to a sentimental young lady a friend of hers and another to her parents She took leave of them in the most touching terms urged the invincible strength of passion as an excuse for the step she was taking and wound up with the assurance that she would consider it the happiest moment of her life when she should be allowed to throw herself at the feet of her dear parents

After having sealed both letters with a Tula seal upon which were engraved two flaming hearts with a suitable inscription she threw herself upon her bed just before daybreak and dozed off but even then she was constantly being awakened by terrible dreams First it seemed to her that at the very moment when she seated herself in the sledge in order to go and get married her father stopped her, dragged her over the snow with agonizing rapidity and threw her into dark bottomless abyss down which she fell headlong with an indescribable sinking of the heart Then she saw Vladimir lying on the grass pale and blood-stained With his dying breath he implored her in a piercing voice to make haste and marry him Other abominable and absurd visions floated before her one after another At last she arose paler than usual and with an unfeigned headache Her father and mother observed her uneasiness their tender solicitude and incessant inquiries What is the matter with you Masha? Are you ill Masha? cut her to the heart She tried to reassure them and to appear cheerful but in vain

Evening came The thought that this was the last day she would pass in the bosom of her family weighed upon her heart. She was more dead than alive. In secret she took leave of everybody of all the objects that surrounded her.

Supper was served. her heart began to beat violently. In a trembling voice she declared that she did not want any supper and then took leave of her father and mother. They kissed her and blessed her as usual and she could hardly restrain herself from weeping.

On reaching her own room she threw herself into a chair and burst into tears. Her maid urged her to be calm and to take courage. Everything was ready. In half an hour Masha would leave for ever her parents' house, her room, and her peaceful girlish life.

Outside a snowstorm was raging. the wind howled, the shutters shook and rattled, and everything seemed to her to portend misfortune.

Soon all was quiet in the house. everyone was asleep. Masha wrapped herself in a shawl, put on a warm cloak, took her box in her hand, and went down the back staircase. Her maid followed her with two bundles. They descended into the garden. The snowstorm had not subsided. the wind blew in their faces as if trying to stop the young criminal. With difficulty they reached the end of the garden. On the road a sledge awaited them. The chilled horses would not keep still. Vladimir's coachman was walking up and down in front of them, trying to restrain their impatience. He helped the young lady and her maid into the sledge, stowed away the box and the bundles, seized the reins, and the horses dashed off.

Having entrusted the young lady to the care of fate and to the skill of Teryoshka the coachman, we will return to our young lover.

All day long Vladimir had been driving about. In the morning he paid a visit to the priest of Zhadrino and having come to an agreement with him after a great deal of difficulty, he then set out to seek for witnesses among the neighboring landowners. The first to whom he presented himself a retired cornet about forty years old whose name was Dravin consented with pleasure. The adventure, he declared reminded him of his young days and his pranks in the Hussars. He persuaded Vladimir to stay to dinner with him and assured him that he would have no difficulty in finding the other two witnesses. And indeed immediately after dinner, appeared the surveyor Schmidt wearing mustaches and spurs, and the son of the captain of police a lad of sixteen who had recently entered the Uhlans. They not only accepted Vladimir's proposal but even vowed that they were ready to sacrifice their lives for him. Vladimir embraced them with rapture and returned home to get everything ready.

It had been dark for some time. He dispatched his faithful Teryoshka to Nenaradovo with his troika and with detailed instructions, ordered for himself the one horse sleigh and set out alone without any coachman for Zhadrino where Marya Gavrilovna was due to arrive in about a couple of hours. He knew the road well and it was only a twenty minute ride.

But Vladimir scarcely found himself on the open road when the wind rose and such a snowstorm came on that he could see nothing. In one minute the road was completely hidden the landscape disappeared in a thick yellow fog through which fell white flakes of snow, earth and sky merged into one. Vladimir found himself off the road and tried vainly to get back to it. His horse went on at random and at every moment climbed either a snowdrift or sank into a hole so that the sledge kept turning over. Vladimir's one effort was not to lose the right direction. But it seemed to him that more than half an hour had already passed, and he had not yet reached the Zhadrino wood. Another ten minutes elapsed—still no wood was to be seen. Vladimir drove across a field intersected by deep ravines. The snowstorm did not abate, the sky did not become very clearer. The horse began to grow tired, and the sweat rolled from Vladimir in great drops, in spite of the fact that he was constantly being half buried in the snow.

At last Vladimir perceived that he was going in the wrong direction. He stopped, began to think, to recollect and compare, and he felt convinced that he ought to have turned to the right. He turned to the right now. His horse could scarcely move forward. He had now been on the road for more than an hour. Zhadrino could not be far off. But on and on he went, and still no end to the field—nothing but snow drifts and ravines. The sledge was constantly turning over, and as constantly being set right again. The time was passing. Vladimir began to grow seriously uneasy.

At last something dark appeared in the distance. Vladimir directed his course toward it. On drawing near, he perceived that it was a wood.

Thank Heaven! he thought. I am not far off now.

He drove along by the edge of the wood, hoping by and by to come upon the well known road, or to pass round the wood. Zhadrino was situated just behind it. He soon found the road, and plunged among the dark trees, now denuded of leaves by the winter. The wind could not rage here, the road was smooth, the horse recovered courage, and Vladimir felt reassured.

But he drove on and on, and Zhadrino was not to be seen. There was no end to the wood. Vladimir discovered with horror that he had entered an unknown forest. Despair took possession of him. He whipped the horse, the poor animal broke into a trot, but soon slackened its pace and in about a quarter of an hour it was scarcely able to drag one leg after the other in spite of all the exertions of the unfortunate Vladimir.

Gradually the trees began to get sparser and Vladimir emerged from the forest, but Zhadrino was not to be seen. It must now have been about midnight. Tears gushed from his eyes he drove on at random. Meanwhile the storm had subsided the clouds dispersed and before him lay a level plain covered with a white undulating carpet. The night was tolerably clear. He saw not far off a little village consisting of four or five houses. Vladimir drove toward it. At the first cottage he jumped out of the sledge ran to the window and began to knock. After a few minutes the wooden shutter was raised and an old man thrust out his gray beard.

What do you want?

Is Zhadrino far from here?

Zhadrino? Far from here?

Yes yes! Is it far?

Not far about ten versts.

At this reply Vladimir clutched his hair and stood motionless like a man condemned to death.

Where do you come from? continued the old man.

Vladimir had not the heart to answer the question.

Listen old man said he can you find any horse to take me to Zhadrino?

How should we have such things as horses? replied the peasant.

Can I at least get a guide? I will pay him whatever he asks.

Wait, said the old man closing the shutter, "I will send my son out to you he will direct you."

Vladimir waited. But a minute had scarcely elapsed when he began knocking again. The shutter was raised and the beard again appeared.

What do you want?

What about your son?

He'll be out presently he is putting on his boots
Are you cold? Come in and warm yourself

Thank you send your son out quickly

The door creaked a lad came out with a cudgel and led the way now pointing out the road now searching for it among the snow drifts

What time is it? Vladimir asked him

It will soon be daylight replied the young peasant
Vladimir did not say another word

The cocks were crowing and it was already light when they reached Zhadrino The church was locked Vladimir paid the guide and drove into the priest's courtyard His troika was not there What news awaited him!

But let us return to the worthy proprietors of Nenaradovo and see what is happening there

Nothing

The old people awoke and went into the parlor Gavrila Gavrilovich in a night-cap and flannel doublet Praskovya Petrovna in a wadded dressing gown The samovar was brought in and Gavrila Gavrilovich sent a servant to ask Marya Gavrilovna how she was and how she had passed the night The servant returned saying that the young lady had not slept very well but that she felt better now and that she would come down presently into the parlor And indeed the door opened and Marya Gavrilovna entered the room and wished her father and mother good morning

How is your head Masha? asked Gavrila Gavri-lovich

Better papa replied Masha

You must have gotten your headache yesterday from charcoal fumes said Praskovya Petrovna

Very likely mamma replied Masha

The day passed happily enough but in the night Masha was taken ill. They sent to town for a doctor. He arrived in the evening and found the sick girl delirious. A violent fever ensued and for two weeks the poor patient hovered on the brink of the grave.

Nobody in the house knew anything about her intended elopement. The letters written the evening before, had been burnt and her maid dreading the wrath of her master had not whispered a word about it to anybody. The priest, the retired cornet, the mustached surveyor and the little Uhlan were discreet, and not without reason. Teryoshka, the coachman never uttered one word too much about it, even when he was drunk. Thus the secret was kept by more than half a dozen conspirators.

But Marya Gavrilovna herself divulged her secret during her delirious ravings. Her words were so disconnected however that her mother who never left her bedside could only understand from them that her daughter was deeply in love with Vladimir Nikolayevich and that probably love was the cause of her illness. She consulted her husband and some of her neighbors and at last it was unanimously decided that such was evidently Marya Gavrilovna's fate: that a woman cannot escape her destined husband even on horseback, that poverty is not a crime, that one does not marry wealth but a man etc etc. Moral maxims are wonderfully useful in those cases where we can invent little in our own justification.

In the meantime the young lady began to recover. Vladimir had not been seen for a long time in the house of Gavril Gavrilovich. He was afraid of the usual reception. It was resolved to send and announce to him an unexpected piece of good news: the consent of Marya's parents to his marriage with their daughter.

But what was the astonishment of the proprietor of Nenaradovo when in reply to their invitation they received from him a half insane letter. He informed them that he would never set foot in their house again and begged them to forget an unhappy creature whose only hope was death. A few days afterwards they heard that Vladimir had joined the army again. This was in the year 1812.

For a long time they did not dare to announce this to Masha who was now convalescent. She never mentioned the name of Vladimir. Some months afterwards finding his name in the list of those who had distinguished themselves and been severely wounded at Borodino she fainted away and it was feared that she would have another attack of fever. But Heaven be thanked! the fainting fit had no serious consequences.

Another misfortune fell upon her. Gavril Gavrilovich died leaving her the heiress to all his property. But the inheritance did not console her. She shared sincerely the grief of poor Praskovya Petrovna, vowing that she would never leave her. They both quitted Nenaradovo the scene of so many sad recollections and went to live on another estate.

Suitors crowded round the charming heiress but she gave not the slightest hope to any of them. Her mother sometimes exhorted her to make a choice but Marya Gavrilovna shook her head and became pensive. Vladimir no longer existed. He had died in Moscow on the eve of the entry of the French. His memory seemed to be held sacred by Masha. At least she treasured up everything that could remind her of him: books that he had once read, his drawings, his music and verses that he had copied out for her. The neighbors hearing of all this were astonished at her constancy and awaited with curiosity the hero who should at last triumph.

over the melancholy fidelity of this virgin Artemis.

Meanwhile the war had ended gloriously. Our reinforcements returned from abroad, and the people went out to meet them. The bands played the songs of the conquered. Live Henri Quatre! Tyrolese waltzes and airs from Joconde. Officers who had set out for the war almost mere lads returned, grown men in martial air, their breasts hung with crosses. The soldiers chatted gaily among themselves, combining French and German words in their speech. Unforgettable time! Time of glory and enthusiasm! How the Russian heart throbbed at the word 'Fatherland!' How sweet were the tears of reunion! With what unanimity did we mingle feelings of national pride with 'love for the Czar!' And for him—what a moment!

Then the Russian women were then incomparable. Their usual coldness disappeared. Their enthusiasm was truly intoxicating when welcoming the conquerors they cried Hurrah!

And tossed their caps into the air!

What officer of that time does not confess that to the Russian women he was indebted for his best and most precious reward?

At this brilliant period Marya Gavrilovna was living with her mother in the province of — and did not see how both capitals celebrated the return of the troops. But in the districts and villages the general enthusiasm was if possible even greater. The appearance of an officer in those sections was for him a veritable triumph, and the lover in a frock coat fared ill in its vicinity.

We have already said that in spite of her coldness Marya Gavrilovna was as before surrounded by suitors. But all had to wait when the wounded Colonel Burdakov of the Hussars, with the Order of St.

George in his button hole and with an interesting pallor—as the young ladies of the neighborhood observed appeared at the manor. He was about twenty six years of age. He had obtained leave of absence to visit his estate which was near that of Marya Gavrilovna. Marya bestowed special attention upon him. In his presence her habitual peniveness disappeared. It can not be said that she flirted with him, but a poet observing her behavior would have said

Se amor non e che dunque?

Burmin was indeed a very charming young man. He had the sort of mind which pleases women—decorous and keen without any pretension—and inclined to carefree mockery. His behavior toward Marya Gavrilovna was simple and frank, but whatever she said or did both his soul and his eyes followed her. He seemed to be of a quiet and modest disposition, though it was reported that he had once been a terrible rake, but this did not injure him in the opinion of Marya Gavrilovna, who—like all young ladies—excused with pleasure follies that gave indication of boldness and ardor of temperament.

But more than everything else—more than his tenderness, more than his agreeable conversation, more than his interesting pallor, more than his arm in a sling—the silence of the young Hussar excited her curiosity and imagination. She could not but confess that he pleased her very much, probably he, too, with his intelligence and experience, had already observed that she singled him out. How was it then that she had not yet seen him at her feet or heard his declaration? What restrained him? Was it timidity or pride or the coquetry of a crafty ladies' man? It was a puzzle to her. After long reflection she came to the conclusion that timidity alone was the cause of it, and she resolved to encourage him by greater attention and if circumstances should render it necessary, even by an exhibition of tenderness. She was preparing a startling denouement and waited with impatience for the moment of the romantic explanation. A secret, of what ever nature it may be, always presses heavily upon the female heart. Her strategy had the desired success at least Burmin fell into such a reverie, and his black eyes rested with such fire upon her, that the decisive moment seemed close at hand. The neighbors spoke about the marriage as if it were a settled matter and good Prashovya Petrovna rejoiced that her daughter had at last found a worthy suitor.

On one occasion the old lady was sitting alone in the parlor playing patience when Burmin entered the room and immediately inquired for Marya Gavrilovna.

She is in the garden, replied the old lady, go out to her and I will wait here for you."

Burmin went and the old lady made the sign of the cross and thought: Perhaps the business will be settled today!

Burmin found Marya Gavrilovna near the pond under a willow tree, with a book in her hands and in a white dress—a veritable heroine of a novel. After the first few questions Marya Gavrilovna purposely allowed the conversation to drop thereby increasing their mutual embarrassment from which there was no possible way of escape except only by a sudden and decisive declaration.

And that is what happened. Burmin, feeling the difficulty of his position declared that he had long sought an opportunity to open his heart to her and requested a moment's attention. Marya Gavrilovna closed her book and cast down her eyes as a sign of consent.

I love you said Burmin I love you passionately Maria Gavrilovna blushed and lowered her head still further I have acted imprudently in indulging the sweet habit of seeing and hearing you daily Marya Gavrilovna recalled to mind the first letter of St Preux But it is now too late to resist my fate the remembrance of you your dear incomparable image will henceforth be the torment and the consolation of my life but there still remains a painful duty for me to perform—to reveal to you a terrible secret which will place between us an insurmountable barrier

That barrier has always existed interrupted Marya Gavrilovna hastily I could never be your wife

I know replied he calmly I know that you once loved but death and three years of mourning Dear kind Marya Gavrilovna do not try to deprive me of my last consolation the thought that you would have consented to make me happy if

Don't speak for Heaven's sake don't speak You torture me

Yes I know I feel that you would have been mine but—I am the most miserable creature under the sun—I am already married!

Maria Gavrilovna looked at him in astonishment

"I am already married" continued Burmin I have been married four years and I do not know who my wife is or where she is or whether I shall ever see her again!

What are you saying? exclaimed Marya Gavrilovna How very strange! Continue I will relate to you afterwards But continue I beg of you

At the beginning of the year 1812 said Burmin I was hastening to Vilna where my regiment was stationed Arriving late one evening at one of the post stations I ordered the horses to be got ready as quickly as possible when suddenly a terrible snowstorm came on, and the postmaster and drivers advised me to wait till it had passed over. I followed their advice but an unaccountable uneasiness took possession of me it seemed as if someone were pushing me forward. Meanwhile the snowstorm did not subside I could endure it no longer and again ordering out the horses I started off at the height of the storm. The driver conceived the idea of following the course of the river which would shorten our journey by three versts. The banks were covered with snow the driver drove past the place where we should have come out upon the road and so we found ourselves in an unknown part of the country. The storm did not abate I saw a light in the distance and I ordered the driver to proceed toward it. We reached a village in the wooden church there was a light. The church was open. Outside the fence stood several sledges and people were passing in and out through the porch.

This way! this way! cried several voices.

I ordered the driver to proceed.

In the name of Heaven where have you been loitering? somebody said to me. The bride has fainted away the priest does not know what to do and we were just getting ready to go back. Get out as quickly as you can.

I got out of the sledge without saying a word and went into the church, which was feebly lit up by two or three tapers. A young girl was sitting on a bench in a dark corner of the church another girl was rubbing her temples.

Thank God! said the latter you have come at last. You have almost killed the young lady.

The old priest advanced toward me and said

Do you wish me to begin?

Begin begin father I replied, absently.

The young girl was raised up. She seemed to me not at all bad looking. Impelled by an incomprehensible unpardonable levity I placed myself by her side in front of the pulpit; the priest hurried on; three men and a maid supported the bride and only occupied themselves with her. We were married.

Kiss each other! said the witnesses to us.

My wife turned her pale face toward me. I was about to kiss her when she exclaimed: Oh! it is not he! it is not he! and fell in a swoon.

The witnesses gazed at me in alarm. I turned round and left the church without the least hindrance, flung myself into the kibitka and cried: Drive off!

My God! exclaimed Marya Gavrilovna. And do you not know what became of your poor wife?

I do not know, replied Burmin; neither do I know the name of the village where I was married, nor the post station where I set out from. At that time I attached so little importance to my wicked prank that on leaving the church I fell asleep and did not awake till the next morning after reaching the third station. The servant who was then with me died during the campaign, so that I have no hope of ever discovering the woman upon whom I played such a cruel joke, and who is now so cruelly avenged.

My God! my God! cried Marya Gavrilovna, seizing him by the hand: then it was you! And you do not recognize me?

Burmin blanched—and threw himself at her feet.

THE UNDERTAKER

*Are coffins not beheld each day
The gray hairs of an aging world?*

Derzhavina

THE last of the effects of the undertaker, Adrian Prokhorov were piled upon the hearse, and a couple of sorry looking jades dragged themselves along for the fourth time from Basmannaya to Nikitskaya whither the undertaker was removing with all his household. After locking up the shop he posted upon the door a placard announcing that the house was for sale or rent and then made his way on foot to his new abode. On approaching the little yellow house which had so long captivated his imagination and which at last he had bought for a considerable sum the old undertaker was astonished to find that his heart did not rejoice. When he crossed the unfamiliar threshold and found his new home in the greatest confusion he sighed for his old hotel where for eighteen years the strictest order had prevailed. He began to scold his two daughters and the servants for their slowness and then set to work to help them himself. Order was soon established—the iron-case the cupboard with the crockery the table the sofa and the bed occupied the corners reserved for them in the back room in the kitchen and parlor were placed the master's wares—coffins of all colors and of all sizes together with cupboards containing mourning hats cloaks and torches.

Over the gate was placed a sign representing a plump Cupid with an inverted torch in his hand and bearing this inscription Plain and colored coffins sold and upholstered here coffins also let out on hire and old ones repaired

The girls retired to their bedroom Adrian made a tour of inspection of his quarters and then sat down by the window and ordered the samovar to be prepared

The enlightened reader knows that Shakespeare and Walter Scott have both represented their grave-diggers as merry and facetious individuals in order that the contrast might more forcibly strike our imagination Out of respect for the truth we cannot follow their example and we are compelled to confess that the disposition of our undertaker was in perfect harmony with his gloomy metier Adrian Prokhorov was usually sullen and pensive He rarely opened his mouth except to scold his daughters when he found them standing idle and gazing out of the window at the passers-by or to ask for his wares an exorbitant price from those who had the misfortune—or sometimes the pleasure—of needing them And so Adrian sitting near the window and drinking his seventh cup of tea was immersed as usual in melancholy reflections He thought of the pouring rain which just a week before had commenced to beat down during the funeral of the retired brigadier Many of the cloaks had shrunk in consequence of the downpour and many of the hats had been put quite out of shape He foresaw unavoidable expenses for his old stock of funeral apparel was in a pitiable condition He hoped to compensate himself for his losses by the burial of old Trukhina the merchant's wife who for more than a year had been upon the point of death But Trukhina lay dying in Razgulyay and Prokhorov was afraid that her heirs, in spite of their promise, would not take the trouble to send so far for him but would make arrangements with the nearest undertaker

These reflections were suddenly interrupted by three masonic knocks at the door

Who is there? asked the undertaker

The door opened, and a man who at first glance could be recognized as a German artisan entered the room and with a jovial air advanced toward the undertaker

Pardon me good neighbor said he in that Russian dialect which to this day we cannot hear without a smile pardon me for disturbing you I wished to make your acquaintance as soon as possible I am a shoemaker, my name is Gottlieb Schultz and I live across the street in that little house just facing your windows To morrow I am going to celebrate my silver wedding and I have come to invite you and your daughters to dine with us

The invitation was cordially accepted The undertaker asked the shoemaker to seat himself and take a cup of tea and thanks to the open hearted disposition of Gottlieb Schultz they were soon engaged in friendly conversation

How is bus ness with you? asked Adrian

So so replied Schultz I can't complain But my wares are not like yours the living can do without shoes but the dead cannot do without coffins

Very true observed Adrian but if a living person hasn't anything to buy shoes with he goes barefoot and ho'ds his peace if you please but a dead beggar gets his coffin for nothing

In this manner the conversation was carried on between them for some time at last the shoemaker rose and took leave of the undertaker renewing his invitation

The next day exactly at twelve o'clock the undertaker and his daughters issued from the wicket-door of their newly purchased residence and went to their neighbors. I will not stop to describe the Russian cas-tan of Adrian Prokhorov nor the European toilettes of Akulina and Darya deviating in this respect from the custom of modern novelists. But I do not think it superfluous to observe that the two girls had on the yellow hats and red shoes which they were accustomed to don on solemn occasions only.

The shoemaker's little dwelling was filled with guests consisting chiefly of German artisans with their wives and apprentices. Of the Russian officials there was present but one Yurko the Finn a constable who in spite of his humble calling was the special object of the host's attention. Like Pogorelsky's postman¹ for twenty five years he had faithfully discharged his duties. The conflagration of 1812 which destroyed the ancient capital destroyed also his little yellow booth. But immediately after the expulsion of the enemy a new one appeared in its place painted gray and with little white Doric columns and Yurko again began to pace to and fro before it with his ax and armor of coarse cloth. He was known to the greater part of the Germans who lived near the Nikitskaya Gate and some of them had even spent Sunday night beneath his roof.

Adrian immediately made himself acquainted with him as with a man whom sooner or later he might have need of and when the guests took their places at the table they sat down beside each other Herr Schultze and his wife, and their daughter Lotchen a young girl of seventeen did the honors of the table and helped the cook to serve. The beer flowed in streams.

A character in a story by Pogorelsky a contemporary of Pushkin.
EDITOR'S NOTE

Yurko ate like four and Adrian in no way gave him his daughters however, stood upon their dignity. The conversation which was carried on in German, gradually grew more and more noisy. Suddenly the host requested a moment's attention and uncorking a sealed bottle he said loudly in Russian

To the health of my good Louise!

The imitation champagne foamed. The host tenderly kissed the fresh face of his partner and the guests drank noisily to the health of the good Louise.

To the health of my amiable guests! exclaimed the host uncorking a second bottle, and the guests thanked him by draining their glasses once more.

Then followed a succession of toasts. The health of each individual guest was drunk. They drank to Moscow and to a round dozen of little German towns. They drank to the health of all guilds in general and of each in particular. They drank to the health of the masters and apprentices. Adrian drank with assiduity and became so jovial, that he proposed a facetious toast himself. Suddenly one of the guests a fat baker, raised his glass and exclaimed

To the health of those for whom we work our customers!

This proposal like all the others, was joyously and unanimously received. The guests began to salute each other. The tailor bowed to the shoemaker the shoemaker to the tailor the baker to both. The whole company to the baker and so on. In the midst of these mutual congratulations, Yurko exclaimed turning to his neighbor

Come little father! Drink to the health of your corpses!

Everybody laughed but the undertaker considered himself insulted and frowned. Nobody noticed it, the guests continued to drink and the bells had already rung for vespers when they rose from the table.

The guests dispersed at a late hour, the greater part of them in a very merry mood. The fat baker and the bookbinder, whose face seemed as if bound in red morocco, linked their arms in those of Yurko and conducted him back to his booth, thus observing the proverb: One good turn deserves another.

The undertaker returned home drunk and angry.

Why is it, he argued aloud, why is it that my trade is not as honest as any other? Is an undertaker brother to the hangman? Why did those heathens laugh? Is an undertaker a buffoon? I wanted to invite them to my new house and give them a feast, but now I'll do nothing of the kind. Instead of inviting them, I will invite those for whom I work, the orthodox dead.

What is the matter, master? said the servant, who was engaged at that moment in taking off his boots, why do you talk such nonsense? Make the sign of the cross! Invite the dead to your new house! What nonsense!

Yes, by God! I will invite them, continued Adrian, and that too for tomorrow! Do me the favor, my benefactors, to come and feast with me tomorrow evening. I will regale you with what God has sent me.

With these words the undertaker turned into bed and soon began to snore.

It was still dark when Adrian was roused out of his sleep. Trukhina, the merchant's wife, had died during the course of that very night, and a special messenger was sent off on horseback by her clerk to carry the news to Adrian. The undertaker gave him ten copecks to buy brandy with, dressed himself as hastily as possible, took a droschky and set out for Razgulyay. At the gate of the house in which the deceased lay, the police had already taken their stand, and the trades-people were busily moving back and forth like ravens that smell a dead body. The deceased lay upon a table yellow as wax, but not yet disfigured by decomposition. Around her stood her relatives, neighbors and domestic servants. All the windows were open, tapers were burning, and the priests were reading the prayers for the dead. Adrian went up to the nephew of Trukh, a young shopman in a fashionable jacket and informed him that the coffin, wax, candles, pall and the other funeral accessories would be immediately delivered in good order. The heir thanked him in an absent-minded manner, saying that he would not bargain about the price, but would rely upon his agent in everything according to his conscience. The undertaker in accordance with his custom swore that he would not charge him too much, exchanged significant glances with the clerk, and then departed to commence operations.

The whole day was spent in passing to and fro between Razgulyay and the Nikitskaya Gate. Toward evening everything was finished and he returned home on foot after having dismissed his driver. It was a moonlight night. The undertaker reached the Nikitskaya Gate in safety. Near the Church of the Ascension he was hailed by our acquaintance Yurko, who recognizing the undertaker wished him good night. It was late. The undertaker was just approaching his house when suddenly he fancied he saw some one approach his gate, open the wicket and disappear within.

What does that mean? thought Adrian. Who can be wanting me again? Can it be a thief come to rob me? Or have my foolish girls got lovers coming after them? It means no good, I fear!

And the undertaker thought of calling his friend Yurko to his assistance. But at that moment, another person approached the wicket and was about to enter but seeing the master of the house hastening toward him he stopped and took off his three-cornered hat. His face seemed familiar to Adrian but in his hurry he was not able to examine it closely.

You are favoring me with a visit said Adrian out of breath. Well in I beg of you.

Don't stand on ceremony sir replied the other in a hollow voice you go first and show your guests the way.

Adrian had no time to spend upon ceremony. The wicket was open he ascended the steps followed by the other. Adrian thought he could hear people walking about in his rooms.

What the devil does all this mean! he thought to himself and he hastened to enter. But the sight that met his eyes caused his legs to give way beneath him.

The room was full of corpses. The moon shining through the windows lit up their yellow and blue faces sunken mouths dim half-closed eyes and protruding noses. Adrian with horror recognized in them people that he himself had buried and in the guest who had entered with him the brigadier who had been buried during the pouring rain. They all ladies and gentlemen surrounded the undertaker with bowings and salutations except one poor man lately buried gratis who conscious and ashamed of his rags did not venture to approach but meekly kept to a corner. All the others were decently dressed the female corpses in caps and ribbons the officials in uniforms but with their beards unshaven the tradesmen in their holiday castans.

You see Prokhorov said the brigadier in the name of all the honorable company we have all risen in response to your invitation. Only those have stopped at home who were unable to come, who have crumbled to pieces and have nothing left but fleshless bones. But even of these there was one who hadn't the patience to remain behind—so much did he want to come and see you.

At this moment a little skeleton pushed his way through the crowd and approached Adrian. His skull smiled affably at the undertaker. Shreds of green and red cloth and rotten linen hung on him here and there as on a pole, and the bones of his feet rattled inside his big jackboots like pestles in mortars.

You do not recognize me, Prokhorov, said the skeleton. Don't you remember the retired sergeant of the Guard, Pyotr Petrovich Kurilkin, the same to whom in the year 1799 you sold your first coffin and a deal one at that instead of oak, as agreed?

With these words the corpse stretched out his bony arms toward him, but Adrian, collecting all his strength, shrieked and pushed him away. Pyotr Petrovich staggered, fell and crumbled to pieces. Among the corpses arose a murmur of indignation, all stood up for the honor of their companion, and they overwhelmed Adrian with such threats and curses, that the poor host, deafened by their shrieks and almost crushed to death, lost his presence of mind, fell upon the bones of the retired sergeant of the Guard and swooned away.

For some time the sun had been shining upon the bed on which the undertaker lay. At last he opened his eyes and saw before him the servant attending to the samovar. With horror Adrian recalled all the incidents of the previous day. Trukhina, the brigadier and the sergeant Kurilkin rose vaguely before his imagination. He waited in silence for the servant to open the conversation and inform him of the events of the night.

How you have slept, Adrian Prokhorovich! said Aksinya, handing him his dressing gown. Your neighbor the tailor, has been here and the constable also called to inform you that today is his name-day but you were so sound asleep that we did not wish to wake you

Did anyone come for me from the late Trukhina?

The late? Is she dead then?"

What a fool you are! Didn't you yourself help me yesterday to prepare the things for her funeral?

Have you taken leave of your senses, master or have you not yet recovered from the effects of yesterday's drinking bout? What funeral was there yesterday? You spent the whole day feasting at the German's and then came home drunk and threw yourself upon the bed and have slept till this hour when the bells have already rung for mass

Really! said the undertaker greatly relieved

Yes indeed replied the servant

Well since that is the case, make tea as quickly as possible and call my daughters

THE POSTMASTER

*This tyrant a collegiate recorder
Still keeps the posting station in good order*
Prince Vyazemsky

WHO has not cursed postmasters who has not quarreled with them? Who in a moment of anger has not demanded from them the fatal book in order to record in it unavailing complaints of their extortions rudeness and carelessness? Who does not look upon them as monsters of the human race equal to the attorneys of old or at least the Murom highway men? Let us however, be just, let us place ourselves in their position and perhaps we shall begin to judge them with more indulgence. What is a postmaster? A veritable martyr of the fourteenth class¹ protected by his rank from blows only and that not always (I appeal to the conscience of my readers). What is the function of this tyrant as Prince Vyazemsky jokingly calls him? Is he not an actual galley slave? He has no rest either day or night. All the vexation accumulated during the course of a wearisome journey the traveler vents upon the postmaster. Should the weather prove intolerable, the road abominable the driver obstinate the horses stubborn—the postmaster is to blame. Entering into his poor abode the traveler looks upon him as an enemy and the postmaster is fortunate if he succeeds in soon getting rid of his unbidden guest but if there should happen to be no horses! Heavens! what volleys of abuse what threats are showered upon his head! When it rains when it is muddy he is compelled to run about the village during times of storm and bitter frost he is glad to seek shelter in the entry if only to enjoy a minute's repose from the shouting and jostling of incensed travelers

A general arrives the trembling postmaster gives him the two last troikas including that intended for the courier The general drives off without uttering a word of thanks Five minutes afterwards—a bell! and a courier throws down upon the table before him his order for fresh post horses! Let us bear all this well in mind and instead of anger our hearts will be filled with sincere compassion A few words more During a period of twenty years I have traversed Russia in every direction I know nearly all the post roads and I am acquainted with several generations of drivers There are very few postmasters that I do not know personally and few with whom I have not had something to do I hope shortly to publish the curious observations that I have noted down during my travels For the present I will only say that the class of postmasters is presented to the public in a very false light These much calumniated officials are generally very peaceful persons obliging by nature disposed to be sociable modest in their pretensions to honors and not too greedy From their conversation (which traveling gentlemen very unreasonably scorn) much may be learnt that is both curious and instructive For my own part I confess that I prefer their talk to that of some official of the sixth class traveling on government business

It may easily be supposed that I have friends among the honorable body of postmasters Indeed the mem ory of one of them is precious to me. Circumstances once brought us together, and it is of him that I now intend to tell my amiable readers.

In the month of May of the year 1816 I happened to be traveling through the X Government along a route that has since been abandoned. I then held an inferior rank, and I traveled by post stages, paying the fare for two horses. As a consequence the postmasters treated me with very little ceremony, and I often had to take by force what, in my opinion, belonged to me by right. Being young and hot tempered, I was indignant at the baseness and cowardice of the postmaster, when the latter harnessed to the coach of some gentleman of rank the horses prepared for me. It was a long time too before I could get accustomed to being served out of my turn by a discriminating flunkey at the governor's dinner. Today the one and the other seem to me to be in the natural order of things. Indeed what would become of us if in stead of the generally observed rule—Let rank honor rank—another were to be brought into use—as for example—Let mind honor mind? What disputes would arise! And whom would the butler serve first? But to return to my story.

The day was hot. About three versts from the N station a drizzling rain came on, and in a few minutes it began to pour down in torrents and I was drenched to the skin. On arriving at the station, my first care was to change my clothes as quickly as possible, my second to ask for some tea.

—Hi! Dunya! cried the postmaster—prepare the mover and go and get some cream.

At these words a young girl of about fourteen years of age appeared from behind the partition and ran out into the entry. Her beauty struck me.

Is that your daughter? I inquired of the postmaster

That is my daughter he replied with a look of gratified pride and she is so sharp and sensible just like her late mother "

Then he began to register my traveling passport and I occupied myself with examining the pictures that adorned his humble but tidy abode. They illustrated the story of the Prodigal Son. In the first a venerable old man in a night-cap and dressing gown was taking leave of the restless lad who was hastily accepting his blessing and a bag of money. In the next picture the dissolute conduct of the young man was depicted in vivid colors he was represented sitting at table surrounded by false friends and shameless women. Further on the ruined youth in rags and a three cornered hat was tending swine and sharing with them their food his face expressed deep grief and repentance. The last picture represented his return to his father the good old man in the same night-cap and dressing gown runs forward to meet him the prodigal son is on his knees in the distance the cook is killing the fatted calf and the elder brother is asking the servants the cause of all the rejoicing. Under each picture I read some suitable German verses. All this I have preserved in my memory to the present day as well as the little pots of balsamum, the bed with gay curtains and the other objects with which I was then surrounded. I can see as though he were before me, the host himself a man of about fifty years of age healthy and vigorous in his long green coat with three medals on faded ribbons.

I had scarcely settled my account with my old driver when Dunya returned with the samovar. The little coquette saw at the second glance the impression she had produced upon me she lowered her large blue eyes

I began to talk to her, she answered me without the least timidity like a girl who has seen the world I offered her father a glass of punch to Dunya herself I gave a cup of tea, and then the three of us began to converse together as if we were old acquaintances

The horses had long been ready, but I felt reluctant to take leave of the postmaster and his daughter At last I bade them good bye, the father wished me a pleasant journey the daughter accompanied me to the coach In the entry I stopped and asked her permission to kiss her Dunya consented I can reckon up a great many kisses

Since first I chose this occupation

but not one which has left behind such a long such a pleasant recollection

Several years passed and circumstances led me to the same route and to the same neighborhood

But thought I perhaps the old postmaster has been changed and Dunya may already be married

The thought that one or the other of them might be dead also flashed through my mind and I approached the N station with a sad foreboding The horses drew up before the little post house On entering the room, I immediately recognized the pictures illustrating the story of the Prodigal Son The table and the bed stood in the same places as before but the flowers were no longer on the window sills, and everything around indicated decay and neglect

The postmaster was asleep under his sheep-skin coat, my arrival awoke him and he stood up It was certainly Samson Vyran but how aged! While he was preparing to register my traveling passport, I gazed at his gray hair the deep wrinkles upon his face that had not been shaved for a long time his bent back and I was astonished to see how three or four years had been able to transform a vigorous individual into a feeble old man

Do you recognize me? I asked him we are old acquaintances

Maybe, replied he sullenly this is a high road and many travelers have stopped here

Is your Dunya well? I continued

The old man frowned

"God knows he replied

Probably she is married? said I

The old man pretended not to have heard my question and went on reading my passport in a low tone. I ceased questioning him and ordered some tea. Curiosity began to torment me, and I hoped that the punch would loosen the tongue of my old acquaintance

I was not mistaken the old man did not refuse the proffered glass. I observed that the rum dispelled his sullenness. At the second glass he began to talk he remembered me or appeared to do so and I heard from him a story which at the time deeply interested and affected me

So you knew my Dunya? he began But who did not know her? Ah Dunya Dunya! What a girl she was! Everybody who passed this way praised her nobody had a word to say against her. The ladies used to give her presents—now a handkerchief now a pair of earrings. The gentlemen used to stop on purpose, as if to dine or to take supper but in reality only to take a longer look at her. However angry a gentleman might be in her presence he grew calm and spoke graciously to me. Would you believe it sir courtiers and government messengers used to talk to her for half an hour at a stretch. It was she held the home together she put everything in order got everything ready and looked after everything. And I like an old fool could not look at her enough could not idolize her needlework beside his bed. In the presence of the postmaster the sick man groaned and scarcely uttered a word, but he drank two cups of coffee and groaning ordered dinner. Dunya did not quit his side. He constantly asked for something to drink, and Dunya gave him a jug of lemonade prepared by herself. The sick man moistened his lips, and each time on returning the jug he feebly pressed Dunya's hand in token of gratitude.

About dinner time the doctor arrived. He felt the sick man's pulse, spoke to him in German, and declared in Russian that he only needed rest, and that in about a couple of days he would be able to set out on his journey. The Hussar gave him twenty-five rubles for his visit, and invited him to dinner; the doctor consented. They both ate with great appetite, drank a bottle of wine, and separated very well satisfied with each other.

Another day passed, and the Hussar felt quite himself again. He was extraordinarily gay, joked unceasingly now with Dunya, now with the postmaster, whistled tunes, chatted with the travelers, copied their passports into the register, and the worthy postmaster took such a fancy to him that when the third day arrived it was with regret that he parted with his amiable guest.

The day was Sunday. Dunya was preparing to go to mass. The Hussar's kibitka stood ready. He took leave of the postmaster, after having generously recompensed him for his board and lodging, bade farewell to Dunya, and offered to drive her as far as the church, which was situated at the edge of the village. Dunya hesitated.

"What are you afraid of?" asked her father. "His Excellency is not a wolf; he won't eat you. Drive with him as far as the church."

Dunya seated herself in the kibitka by the side of the Hussar, the servant sprang upon the box, the driver whistled and the horses started off at a gallop.

The poor postmaster could not understand how he could have allowed his Dunya to drive off with the Hussar how he could have been so blind and what had become of his senses at that moment. A half hour had not elapsed before his heart began to ache, and uneasiness took possession of him to such a degree, that he could contain himself no longer and started off for mass himself. On reaching the church he saw that the people were already beginning to disperse, but Dunya was neither in the churchyard nor in the porch. He hastened into the church the priest was leaving the chancel the sexton was blowing out the candles two old women were still praying in a corner but Dunya was not in the church. The poor father was scarcely able to summon up sufficient resolution to ask the sexton if she had been to mass. The sexton replied that she had not. The postmaster returned home neither alive nor dead. One hope alone remained to him. Dunya in the thoughtlessness of youth might have taken it into her head to go on as far as the next station where her godmother lived. In agonizing agitation he awaited the return of the troika in which he had let her set out. There was no sign of it. At last in the evening the driver arrived alone and intimated with the terrible news. Dunya went on with the Hussar from the next station.

The old man could not bear his misfortune he immediately took to that very same bed where the evening before the young deceiver had lain. Taking all the circumstances into account the postmaster now came to the conclusion that the illness had been a mere pretence. The poor man fell ill with a violent fever. He was removed to S—, and in his place another person was appointed for the time being. The same doctor who had attended the Hussar attended him also. He assured the postmaster that the young man had been perfectly well and that at the time of his visit he had suspected him of some evil intention but that he had kept silent through fear of his whip. Whether the German spoke the truth or only wished to boast of his perspicacity his communication afforded no consolation to the poor invalid. Scarcely had the latter recovered from his illness when he obtained from the postmaster of S— two months' leave of absence and without saying a word to anybody of his intention he set out on foot in search of his daughter.

From the traveling passport he knew that Captain Minsky was journeying from Smolensk to St. Petersburg. The driver with whom he had gone off said that Dunya had wept the whole of the way although she seemed to go of her own free will.

Perhaps, thought the postmaster, I shall bring my lost lamb home again.

With this thought he reached St. Petersburg stopped in the neighborhood of the Izmailovsky barracks at the house of a retired corporal, an old comrade of his and began his search. He soon discovered that Captain Minsky was in St. Petersburg and was living at Demoute's Inn. The postmaster resolved to call upon him.

Early in the morning he went to Minsky's ante-chamber and requested that His Excellency might be informed that an old soldier wished to see him. The orderly who was just then polishing a boot on a boot tree informed him that his master was still asleep and that he never received anybody before eleven o'clock. The postmaster retired and returned at the appointed time. Minsky himself came out to him in his dressing gown and red skull-cap.

Well, brother, what do you want? he asked.

The old man's heart was wrung, tears started to his eyes and he was only able to say in a trembling voice

Your Excellency! do me the great favor!

Minsky glanced quickly at him, flushed, took him by the hand, led him into his study and locked the door.

Your Excellency! continued the old man, what has fallen from the load is lost, give me back at least my poor Dunya. You have had your pleasure with her, do not ruin her for nothing.

What is done cannot be undone, said the young man, in the utmost confusion, I am guilty before you, and am ready to ask your pardon, but do not think that I could forsake Dunya, she will be happy, I give you my word of honor. Why do you want her? She loves me, she has become unaccustomed to her former way of living. Neither you nor she will forget what has happened.

Then, pushing something into the old man's cuff, he opened the door and the postmaster, without remembering how, found himself in the street again.

For a long time he stood motionless. At last he observed in the cuff of his sleeve a roll of papers. He drew them out and unrolled several fifty ruble notes. Tears again filled his eyes, tears of indignation! He crushed the notes into a ball, flung them upon the ground, stamped upon them with the heel of his boot and then walked away. After having gone a few steps he stopped, reflected, and returned, but the notes were no longer there. A well-dressed young man, noticing him, ran toward a droshky, jumped in hurriedly, and cried to the driver: Go on!

The postmaster did not pursue him. He resolved to return home to his station, but before doing so he wished to see his poor Dunya once more. For that purpose he returned to Minsky's lodgings a couple of days later, but when he came the orderly told him roughly that his master received nobody pushed him out of the ante-chamber and slammed the door in his face. The postmaster stood waiting for a long time then he walked away.

That same day in the evening he was walking along Liteinaia Street having been to a service at the Church of Our Lady of All the Sorrowing. Suddenly a smart droshky flew past him and the postmaster recognized Minsky. The droshky stopped in front of a three story house, close to the entrance and the Hussar ran up the steps. A happy thought flashed through the mind of the postmaster. He returned and approaching the coachman Whose horse is this my friend? asked he. Doesn't it belong to Minsky?

Exactly so replied the coachman what do you want?

Well your master ordered me to carry a letter to his Dunya and I have forgotten where his Dunya lives.

She lives here, on the second floor. But you are late with your letter my friend he is with her himself just now.

That doesn't matter replied the postmaster with an indescribable emotion. Thanks for your information I shall do as I was told. And with these words he ascended the staircase.

The door was locked he rang. There was a painful delay of several seconds. The key rattled and the door was opened.

Does Avdotya Samsonovna live here? he asked.

Yes replied a young maidservant what do you want with her?

The postmaster without replying walked into the room.

You mustn't go in you mustn't go in! the servant

cried out after him Avdotya Samsonovna has visitors'

But the postmaster, without heeding her walked straight on. The first two rooms were dark in the third there was a light. He approached the open door and paused. In the room which was beautifully furnished sat Minsky in deep thought. Dunya attired in the most elegant fashion, was sitting upon the arm of his chair, like a lady rider upon her English saddle. She was gazing tenderly at Minsky, and winding his black curls round her dazzling fingers. Poor postmaster! Never had his daughter seemed to him so beautiful. He admired her against his will.

Who is there? she asked, without raising her head.

He remained silent. Receiving no reply Dunya raised her head and with a cry she fell upon the carpet. The alarmed Minsky hastened to pick her up but suddenly catching sight of the old postmaster in the doorway he left Dunya and approached him trembling with rage.

What do you want? he said to him clenching his teeth. Why do you steal after me everywhere like a thief? Or do you want to murder me? Be off! and with a powerful hand he seized the old man by the collar and pushed him out onto the stairs.

The old man returned to his lodgings. His friend advised him to lodge a complaint but the postmaster reflected, waved his hand and resolved to abstain from taking any further steps in the matter. Two days afterwards he left St. Petersburg and returned to his station to resume his duties.

"This is the third year," he concluded, "that I have been living without Dunya and I have not heard a word about her. Whether she is alive or not—God only knows. So many things happen. She is not the first nor yet the last that a traveling scoundrel has seduced kept for a little while and then abandoned. There are many such young fools in St. Petersburg today in satin and velvet and tomorrow sweeping the streets along with the riff-raff of the dram-shops. Sometimes when I think that Dunya also may come to such an end then in spite of myself I sin and wish her in her grave.

Such was the story of my friend the old postmaster—a story more than once interrupted by tears which he picturesquely wiped away with the skirt of his coat, like the zealous Terentyich in Dmuriyev's beautiful ballad. These tears were partly induced by the punch of which he had drunk five glasses during the course of his narrative but for all that they moved me deeply. After taking leave of him it was a long time before I could forget the old postmaster and for a long time I thought of poor Dunya.

Passing through the little town of X a short time ago I remembered my friend. I heard that the station over which he ruled had been done away with. To my question, "Is the old postmaster still alive?" nobody could give me a satisfactory reply. I resolved to pay a visit to the familiar place and having hired horses I set out for the village of N—

It was in the autumn. Gray clouds covered the sky, a cold wind blew across the reaped fields carrying along with it the red and yellow leaves from the trees that it encountered. I arrived in the village at sunset and stopped at the little post-house. In the entry (where Dunya had once kissed me) a stout woman came out to meet me and in answer to my questions replied that the old postmaster had been dead for about a year, that his house was occupied by a brewer.

and that she was the brewer's wife I began to regret my useless journey, and the seven rubles that I had spent in vain

Of what did he die? I asked the brewer's wife

Of drink sir, she replied

And where is he buried?

On the outskirts of the village, near his late wife

Could somebody take me to his grave?

To be sure! Hi Vanka you have played with that cat long enough Take this gentleman to the cemetery and show him the postmaster's grave

At these words a ragged lad with red hair and blind in one eye ran up to me and immediately began to lead the way toward the burial ground

Did you know the dead man? I asked him on the road

Yes indeed! He taught me how to cut whistles When he came out of the dram shop (God rest his soul!) we used to run after him and call out Grand father! grandfather! some nuts! and he used to throw nuts to us He always used to play with us

And do the travelers remember him?

There are very few travelers now the assessor passes this way sometimes but he doesn't trouble himself about dead people Last summer a lady passed through here and she asked after the old postmaster and went to his grave

What sort of a lady? I asked with curiosity

A very beautiful lady replied the lad She was in a carriage with six horses and had along with her three little children a nurse and a little black lapdog and when they told her that the old postmaster was dead she began to cry and said to the children Sit still I will go to the cemetery I offered to show her the way But the lady said I know the way And she gave me a five copeck piece such a kind lady!

We reached the cemetery a bare place with no fence around it dotted with wooden crosses which were not shaded by a single tree. Never in my life had I seen such a dismal cemetery.

This is the old postmaster's grave, said the lad to me, leaping upon a heap of sand in which was planted a black cross with a bronze ikon.

And did the lady come here? I asked.

Yes, replied Vanka. I watched her from a distance. She cast herself down here and remained lying down for a long time. Then she went back to the village, sent for the priest, gave him some money and drove off after giving me a five-copeck piece such a kind lady!

And I too gave the lad a five-copeck piece and I no longer regretted the journey nor the seven rubles that I had spent on it.

These and similar sarcastic remarks, thanks to the zeal of obliging neighbors, did not fail to reach the ears of Grigory Ivanovich, greatly embellished. The Anglomaniac bore criticism as impatiently as our journalists. He became furious, and called his traducer a boor and a country bumpkin.

Such were the relations between the two proprietors, when Berestov's son came home. He had been educated at the University of—— and intended to enter the military service, but to this his father would not give his consent. For the civil service the young man had not the slightest inclination and as neither felt inclined to yield to the other the young Alexey lived in the meantime like a gentleman and at any rate allowed his mustache to grow¹.

Alexey was indeed a fine young fellow, and it would really have been a pity were his slender frame never to be set off to advantage by a military uniform and were he to be compelled to spend his youth in bending over the papers of the chancery office instead of cutting a figure on horseback. The neighbors, observing how at the hunt he always dashed ahead across the fields, agreed that he would never make a proper clerk. The young ladies cast glances at him and sometimes could not leave off looking at him, but Alexey troubled himself very little about them and they attributed this insensibility to some secret love affair. Indeed there passed from hand to hand a copy of the address on one of his letters. To Akulina Petrovna Kurochkina in Moscow opposite the Alexeyevsky Monastery, in the house of the coppersmith Savelyev with the request that she hand this letter to A. N. R.

Those of my readers who have never lived in the country cannot imagine how charming these provincial young ladies are! Brought up in the pure air under the shadow of their own apple trees they derive their knowledge of the world and of life from books.

¹ It was formerly the custom in Russia for military men only to wear the mustache.

Solitude freedom and reading develop very early within them sentiments and passions unknown to our town bred beauties For the young ladies of the country the sound of harness bells is an event a journey to the nearest town marks an epoch in their lives and the visit of a guest leaves behind a long and sometimes an everlasting memory Of course everybody is at liberty to laugh at some of their peculiarities but the jokes of a superficial observer cannot nullify their essential merits the chief of which is that quality of character that individualité without which in Jean Paul's opinion there can be no human greatness In the capitals women receive perhaps a better education but intercourse with the world soon smooths down the character and makes their souls as uniform as their head-dresses This is said neither by way of judgment nor of censure but nota nostra manet as one of the old commentators writes

It can easily be imagined what impression Alexey produced in the circle of our young ladies He was the first who appeared before them gloomy and disenchanted the first who spoke to them of lost happiness and of his blighted youth in addition to which he wore a black ring engraved with a death's head All this was something quite new in that province The young ladies went mad over him

But not one of them felt so much interest in him as the daughter of our Anglomaniac, Liza or Betsy as Grigory Ivanovich usually called her As their parents did not visit each other she had not yet seen Alexey even when he had become the sole topic of conversation among all the young ladies of the neighborhood She was seventeen years old Dark eyes illuminated her swarthy and exceedingly pleasant countenance She was an only and consequently a spoiled child Her liveliness and continual pranks delighted her father and filled with despair the heart of Miss Jackson, her governess an affected old maid of forty, who powdered her face and darkened her eyebrows read through Parrala twice a year, for which she received two thousand rubles and was dying of boredom in this barbarous Russia

Liza was waited upon by Nastya who although somewhat older was quite as giddy as her mistress Liza was very fond of her, confided to her all her secrets and planned pranks together with her in a word Nastya was a far more important person in the village of Priluchino than the trusted confidante in a French tragedy

Will you allow me to go out to-day on a visit? said Nastya one morning as she was dressing her mistress

Certainly but where are you going to?

To Tugilovo to the Berestovs The wife of their cook is going to celebrate her name-day to-day, and he came over yesterday to invite us to dinner

Well! said Liza the masters are at odds with each other but the servants entertain each other

What have the masters to do with us? replied Nastya Besides I belong to you and not to your papa You have not had any quarrel with young Berestov let the old ones quarrel and fight if it gives them any pleasure

Try and see Alexey Berestov, Nastya and then tell me what he looks like and what sort of a person he is

Nastya promised to do so and all day long Liza waited with impatience for her return In the evening Nastya made her appearance

Well Lizaveta Grigoryevna said she on entering the room I have seen young Berestov and I had ample opportunity for taking a good look at him for we have been together all day

How did that happen? Tell me about it tell me everything just as it happened

Very well We set out I Anisya Yegorovna Neniila Dunka

Yes yes I know And then?

With your leave I will tell you everything in detail We arrived just in time for dinner The room was full of people The folk from Kolbino were there from Zakharvevo the bailiff's wife and her daughters the people from Khlupino

Well and Perestov?

Wait a moment We sat down to table the bailiff's wife had the place of honor I sat next to her the daughters sulked but I didn't care about them

Good heavens Nastya how tiresome you are with your never-ending details!

How impatient you are! Well we rose from the table we had been sitting down for three hours and the dinner was excellent pastry blanc mange, blue red and striped Well we left the table and went into the garden to have a game of tag and it was then that the young master made his appearance

Well and is it true that he is so very handsome?

Exceedingly handsome tall well built and with red cheeks

Really? And I was under the impression that he was pale Well and how did he seem to you? Sad thoughtful?

Nothing of the kind! I have never in my life seen such a madcap He joined in our game

Joined in your game of tag? Impossible!

Not at all impossible And what else do you think he did? He did catch you and kiss you!

With your permission Nastya you are fibbing

With your permission I am not fibbing I had the greatest trouble in the world to get away from him. He spent the whole day with us."

But they say that he is in love and hasn't eyes for anybody.

I don't know anything about that, but I know that he looked at me a good deal and so he did at Tanya, the bailiff's daughter, and at Pasha from Kolbino too. But it cannot be said that he misbehaved—the scamp!

That is extraordinary! And what do they say about him in the house?

They say that he is an excellent master—so kind, so cheerful. They have only one fault to find with him: he is too fond of running after the girls. But for my part, I don't think that is a very great fault: he will settle down with age.

How I should like to see him! said Liza with a sigh.

What is so difficult about it? Tugilovo is not far from us—only about three versts. Go and take a walk in that direction, or a ride on horseback, and you will assuredly meet him. He goes out early every morning with his gun.

No, no, that would not do. He might think that I was running after him. Besides, our fathers are not on good terms, so that I cannot make his acquaintance.

Ah! Nastya, do you know what I'll do? I will dress myself up as a peasant girl!

Exactly! Put on a coarse blouse and a sarajan and then go boldly to Tugilovo. I will answer for it that Berestov will not pass you by.

And I know how to speak like the peasants about here. Ah, Nastya! my dear Nastya! what an excellent idea!

And Liza went to bed, firmly resolved on putting her plan into execution.

The next morning she began to prepare to carry out her plan. She sent to the market and bought some coarse linen, some blue nankeen and some copper buttons, and with the help of Nastya she cut out for herself a blouse and sarafan. She then set all the female servants to work to do the necessary sewing, so that by evening everything was ready. Liza tried on the new costume, and as she stood before the mirror she confessed to herself that she had never looked so charming. Then she rehearsed her part. As she walked she made a low bow, and then nodded her head several times, after the manner of a clay cat, spoke in the peasants' dialect, smiled behind her sleeve, and earned Nastya's complete approval. One thing only proved irksome to her: she tried to walk barefooted across the courtyard, but the turf pricked her tender feet, and she found the sand and gravel unbearable. Nastya immediately came to her assistance. She took the measurement of Liza's foot, ran to the fields to find Trofim the shepherd, and ordered him to make a pair of bast shoes to fit.

The next morning, at crack o' dawn, Liza was already awake. Everybody in the house was still asleep. Nastya, at the gate, was waiting for the shepherd. The sound of a horn was heard, and the village flock defiled past the manor house. Trofim, as he passed, Nastya gave her a small pair of colored bast shoes, and received from her a half ruble in exchange. Liza quietly dressed herself in the peasant's costume, whispered her instructions to Nastya with reference to Miss Jackson, descended the back staircase and made her way through the kitchen garden into the field beyond.

The eastern sky was all aglow, and the golden rows of clouds seemed to be awaiting the sun, as courtiers await their monarch. The clear sky, the freshness of the morning, the dew, the light breeze, and the singing of the birds filled the heart of Liza with childish joy The fear of meeting some acquaintance seemed to give her wings for she flew rather than walked But as she approached the grove which formed the boundary of her father's estate, she slackened her pace Here she resolved to wait for Alexey Her heart beat violently, she knew not why but is not the fear which accompanies our youthful escapades their greatest charm? Liza advanced into the depth of the grove The muffled undulating murmur of the branches welcomed the young girl Her gaiety vanished Little by little she abandoned herself to sweet reveries She thought—but who can say exactly what a young lady of seventeen thinks of, alone in a grove at six o'clock of a spring morning? And so she walked musingly along the path way which was shaded on both sides by tall trees when suddenly a magnificent hunting dog barked at her Liza became frightened and cried out But at the same moment a voice called out Tout beau Sbagarret! and a young hunter emerged from behind a clump of bushes

Don't be afraid my dear said he to Liza my dog does not bite

Liza had already recovered from her fright and she immediately took advantage of her opportunity

But sir said she assuming a half frightened half bashful expression I am so afraid he looks so fierce—he might fly at me again

Alexey—for the reader has already recognized him—gazed fixedly at the young peasant girl

I will accompany you if you are afraid he said to her will you allow me to walk along with you

Who is to hinder you? replied Liza A free man may do as he likes and the road is everybody's

Where do you come from

From Priluchino, I am the daughter of Vassily the blacksmith and I am going to gather mushrooms (Liza carried a basket on her arm) And you sir?

From Tugilovo I have no doubt

Exactly so replied Alexey I am the young master's valet

Alexey wanted to put himself on an equal footing with her but Liza looked at him and laughed

That is a fib said she I am not such a fool as you may think I see very well that you are the young master himself

Why do you think so?

I think so for a great many reasons

But——

As if it were not possible to tell the master from the servant! You are not dressed like a servant you do not speak like one and you do not call your dog the way we do

Alexey liked Liza more and more As he was not accustomed to standing upon ceremony with pretty peasant girls he wanted to embrace her but Liza drew back from him and suddenly assumed such a cold and severe look that Alexey although much amused did not venture to renew the attempt

If you wish that we should remain good friends said she with dignity be good enough not to forget yourself

Who taught you to be so clever? asked Alexey bursting into a laugh Can it be my friend Nastenka the maid of your young mistress? See how enlightenment becomes diffused!

Liza felt that she had stepped out of her role and she immediately recovered herself

Do you think said she that I have never been to the manor house? Don't alarm yourself I have seen and heard a great many things But continued she if I talk to you I shall not gather my mushrooms Go your way sir and I will go mine Pray excuse me.

And she was about to move off but Alexey seized hold of her hand

What is your name, my dear?

Akulina replied Liza endeavoring to disengage her fingers from his grasp but let me go sir it is time for me to return home

Well my friend Akulina I will certainly pay a visit to your father Vasily the blacksmith

What do you say? exclaimed Liza quickly for Heaven's sake don't think of doing such a thing! If it were known at home that I had been talking to a gentleman alone in the grove I should fare very badly—my father Vassily the blacksmith, would beat me to death

But I really must see you again

Well then, I will come here again some time to your mushrooms

When?

Well tomorrow if you wish it

My dear Akulina, I would kiss you but I dare not Tomorrow, then, at the same time isn't that so?

Yes yes!

And you will not deceive me?

I will not deceive you

Swear it

Well then I swear by Holy Friday that I will come

The young people separated Liza emerged from the wood crossed the field stole into the garden and hastened to the place where Nastya awaited her There she changed her costume replying absently to the questions of her impatient confidante and then she repaired to the parlor The cloth was laid the breakfast was ready, and Miss Jackson already powdered and laced up so that she looked like a wine glass, was cutting thin slices of bread and butter

Her father praised her for her early walk.

There is nothing so healthy said he "as getting up at daybreak.

Then he cited several instances of human longevity which he had taken from the English journals and observed that all persons who had lived to be upwards of a hundred abstained from brandy and rose at daybreak winter and summer.

Liza did not listen to him. In her thoughts she was going over all the circumstances of the morning's meeting. Akulina's whole conversation with the young hunter and her conscience began to torment her. In vain did she try to persuade herself that their talk had not gone beyond the bounds of propriety and that the prank would be followed by no serious consequences—her conscience spoke louder than her reason. The promise given for the following day troubled her more than anything else and she almost felt resolved not to keep her solemn oath. But then might not Alexey after waiting for her in vain make his way to the village and search out the daughter of Vassily the blacksmith the veritable Akulina—a fat pock-marked peasant girl—and so discover the prank she had played upon him? This thought horrified Liza and she resolved to repair to the little wood the next morning again as Akulina.

For his part Alexey was in an ecstasy of delight. All day long he thought of his new acquaintance and in his dreams at night the form of the dark-skinned beauty appeared before him. The morning had scarcely begun to dawn when he was already dressed. Without giving himself time to load his gun he set out for the fields with his faithful Sbogor and hastened to the place of the promised rendezvous. A half hour of intolerable waiting passed by at last he caught a glimpse of a blue sarafan between the bushes and he rushed forward to meet his charming Akulina. She smiled at his ecstasy of gratitude, but Alexey immediately observed upon her face traces of sadness and uneasiness. He wished to know the cause. Liza confessed to him that her act seemed to her very frivolous that she repented of it that this time she did not wish to break her promised word but that this meeting would be the last, and she therefore entreated him to break off an acquaintanceship which could not lead to any good.

All this, of course was expressed in the language of a peasant but such thoughts and sentiments so unusual in a simple girl of the lower class struck Alexey with astonishment. He employed all his eloquence to divert Akulina from her purpose he assured her that his intentions were honorable, promised her that he would never give her cause to repent that he would obey her in everything and earnestly entreated her not to deprive him of the joy of seeing her alone if only once a day or even only twice a week. He spoke the language of true passion and at that moment he was really in love. Liza listened to him in silence.

Give me your word said she at last, "that you will never come to the village in search of me, and that you will never seek a meeting with me except those that I shall appoint myself."

Alexey swore by Holy Friday but she stopped him with a smile.

I do not want you to swear, said she your mere word is sufficient.

After that they began to converse together in a friendly manner strolling about the wood until Liza said to him

Time is up

They separated and when Alexey was left alone he could not understand how in two meetings a simple peasant girl had succeeded in acquiring such real power over him. His relations with Akulina had for him all the charm of novelty and although the injunctions of the strange peasant girl appeared to him to be very severe the thought of breaking his word never once entered his mind. The fact was that Alexey in spite of his fateful sin, his mysterious correspondence and his gloomy disenchantment was a good and impulsive young fellow with a pure heart capable of innocent pleasure.

Were I to listen to my own wishes only I would here enter into a minute description of the interviews of the young people of their growing inclination toward each other their confidences occupations and conversations but I know that the greater part of my readers would not share my interest. Such details are usually considered tedious and uninteresting and therefore I will omit them merely observing that before two months had elapsed Alexey was already hopelessly in love and Liza equally so though less demonstrative in revealing the fact. Both were happy in the present and troubled themselves little about the future.

The thought of indissoluble ties frequently passed through their minds but never had they spoken to each other about the matter. The reason was plain. Alexey however much attached he might be to his lovely Akulina could not forget the distance that separated him from the poor peasant girl while Liza knowing the hatred that existed between their parents did not dare to hope for a mutual reconciliation. Moreover her amour propre was stimulated in secret by the obscure and romantic hope of seeing at last the proprietor of Tugilovo at the feet of the daughter of the Priluhino blacksmith. All at once an important event occurred which threatened to alter their mutual relations.

One bright cold morning—such a morning as is very common during our Russian autumn.—Ivan Petrovich Berestov went out for a ride on horseback taking with him three pairs of hunting dogs a groom and several peasant boys with clappers. At the same time Grigory Ivanovich Muromsky tempted by the beautiful weather ordered his bob tailed mare to be saddled and started out to visit his Anglicized domains. On approaching the wood he perceived his neighbor sitting proudly on his horse in his cloak lined with fox skin waiting for a hare which the boys with loud cries and the rattling of their clappers, had started out of a thicket. If Grigory Ivanovich had foreseen this meeting he would certainly have proceeded in another direction but he came upon Berestov so unexpectedly that he suddenly found himself no farther than the distance of a pistol shot away from him. There was no help for it Muromsky like a civilized European rode forward toward his adversary and politely saluted him. Berestov returned the salute with the zeal characteristic of a chained bear who salutes the public in obedience to the order of his master.

At that moment the hare darted out of the wood and started off across the field. Berestov and the groom raised a loud shout let the dogs loose and then galloped off in pursuit. Muromsky's horse not being accustomed to hunting took fright and bolted. Muromsky who prided himself on being a good horseman gave it full rein and inwardly rejoiced at the incident which delivered him from a disagreeable companion. But the horse, reaching a ravine which it had not previously noticed suddenly sprang to one side and Muromsky was thrown from the saddle. Striking the frozen ground with considerable force he lay there curing his bob tailed mare which as if recovering itself had suddenly come to a standstill as soon as it felt that it was without a rider.

Ivan Petrovich hastened toward him and inquired if he had injured himself. In the meantime the groom had secured the guilty horse which he now led forward by the bridle. He helped Muromsky into the saddle, and Berestov invited him to his house. Muromsky could not refuse the invitation for he felt indebted to him, and so Berestov returned home, covered with glory for having hunted down a hare and for bringing with him his adversary wounded and almost a prisoner of war.

The two neighbors took breakfast together and conversed with each other in a very friendly manner. Muromsky requested Berestov to lend him a droshky for he was obliged to confess that owing to his bruises he was not in a condition to return home on horseback. Berestov conducted him to the steps, and Muromsky did not take leave of him until he had obtained a promise from him that he would come the next day in company with Alexey Ivanovich and dine in a friendly way at Priluchino. In this way was a deeply rooted enmity of long standing apparently brought to an end by the skittishness of a bob-tailed mare.

Liza ran forward to meet Grigory Ivanovich.

"What does this mean, papa?" said she with astonishment. "Why are you limping? Where is your horse? Whose droshky is this?"

"You will never guess, my dear," replied Grigory Ivanovich, and then he related to her everything that had happened.

Liza could not believe her ears. Without giving her time to collect herself, Grigory Ivanovich then went on to inform her that the two Berestovs—father and son—would dine with them on the following day.

"What do you say?" she exclaimed, turning pale. "The Berestovs, father and son, will dine with us tomorrow! No, papa you can do as you please, but I shall not show myself

What! Have you taken leave of your senses? replied her father. Since when have you been so bashful? Or do you cherish an hereditary hatred toward him like a heroine of romance? Enough, do not be a fool

No papa not for anything in the world not for any treasure would I appear before the Berestovs

Grigory Ivanovich shrugged his shoulders, and did not dispute with her any further for he knew that by contradiction he would obtain nothing from her and went to rest after his eventful ride

Lizaveta Grigoryevna repaired to her room and summoned Nastya. They both conversed together for a long time about the impending visit. What would Ale-ey think if in the well bred young lady he recognized his Akulina? What opinion would he have of her conduct of her manners of her good sense? On the other hand Liza wished very much to see what impression would be produced upon him by a meeting so unexpected. Suddenly an idea flashed through her mind. She communicated it to Nastya both felt delighted with it and they resolved to carry it into effect

The next day at breakfast Grigory Ivanovich asked his daughter if she still intended to hide from the Berestovs

Papa replied Liza I will receive them if you wish it but on one condition and that is that however I may appear before them or whatever I may do, you will not be angry with me or show the least sign of astonishment or displeasure

Some new prank! said Grigory Ivanovich laughing. Very well, very well I agree do what you like, my dark-eyed romp

With these words he kissed her on the forehead and Liza ran off to put her plan into execution.

At two o'clock precisely a carriage of domestic make drawn by six horses entered the courtyard and rounded the lawn. The elder Berestov mounted the steps with the assistance of two lackeys in the Muromsky livery. His son came after him on horseback and together they entered the dining room where the table was already laid. Muromsky received his neighbors in the most gracious manner, proposed that they inspect his garden and menagerie before dinner and conducted them along paths carefully kept and graveled. The elder Berestov inwardly deplored the time and labor wasted in such useless fancies but he held his tongue out of politeness. His son shared neither the disapprobation of the economical landowner nor the enthusiasm of the vain glorious Anglomaniac but waited with impatience for the appearance of his host's daughter of whom he had heard a great deal and although his heart as we know was already engaged youthful beauty always had a claim upon his imagination.

Returning to the parlor they all three sat down and while the old men recalled their young days and related anecdotes of their respective careers in the service, Alexey reflected as to what role he should play in the presence of Liza. He decided that an air of cold indifference would be the most becoming under the circumstances and he prepared to act accordingly. The door opened he turned his head with such indifference, with such haughty carelessness that the heart of the most inveterate coquette would inevitably have quaked. Unfortunately instead of Liza it was old Miss Jackson who painted and tightly laced entered the room with downcast eyes and with a curtsy so that Alexey's remarkable military move was wasted. He had not succeeded in recovering from his confusion, when the door opened again and this time it was Liza herself who entered

All rose, her father was just beginning to introduce his guests, when suddenly he stopped short and bit his lips. Liza, his dark-complexioned Liza was painted white up to the ears and was more heavily made up than even Miss Jackson herself, false curls much lighter than her own hair covered her head like the peruque of Louis the Fourteenth, her sleeves à l'imbecille stood out like the hooped skirts of Madame de Pompadour, her figure was pinched in like the letter X and all her mother's jewels which had not yet found their way to the pawnbrokers, shone upon her fingers, her neck and in her ears

Alexey could not possibly recognize his Akulina in the grotesque and dazzling young lady. His father kissed her hand and he followed his example though much against his will, when he touched her little white fingers it seemed to him that they trembled. In the meantime he succeeded in catching a glimpse of her little foot, intentionally advanced and set off to advantage by the most coquettish shoe imaginable. This reconciled him somewhat to the rest of her toilette. As for the paint and powder it must be confessed that in the simplicity of his heart he had not noticed them at the first glance and afterwards had no suspicion of them. Grigory Ivanovich remembered his promise and endeavored not to show any astonishment but his daughter's prank seemed to him so amusing that he could scarcely contain himself. But the person who felt no inclination to laugh was the prim English governess. She had a shrewd suspicion that the paint and powder had been extracted from her chest of drawers, and a deep flush of anger was distinctly visible beneath the artificial whiteness of her face. She darted angry glances at the young madcap who reserving her explanations for another time pretended that she did not notice them

They sat down to table Alexey continued to play his role of assumed indifference and absent mindedness Liza put on an air of affectation spoke in a sing song through her teeth and only in French Her father kept constantly looking at her not understanding her object but finding it all exceedingly amusing The English governess fumed with rage and said not a word Ivan Petrovich alone seemed at home he ate like two drank heavily laughed at his own jokes and grew more talkative and hilarious every moment

At last they all rose from the table the guests took their departure and Grigory Ivanovich gave free vent to his laughter and to his questions

What put the idea into your head of fooling them like this? he said to Liza But do you know what? The paint suits you admirably I do not wish to fathom the mysteries of a lady's toilette but if I were in your place I would very soon begin to paint not too much of course, but just a little

Liza was enchanted with the success of her stratagem She embraced her father promised him that she would consider his advice and then hastened to console the indignant Miss Jackson who with great reluctance consented to open the door and listen to her explanations Liza was ashamed to appear before strangers with her dark complexion she had not dared to ask she felt sure that dear good Miss Jackson would pardon her etc etc Miss Jackson feeling convinced that Liza had not wished to make her a laughing stock by imitating her calmed down kissed her and as a token of reconciliation made her a present of a small pot of English ceruse which Liza accepted with every appearance of sincere gratitude

The reader will readily imagine that Liza lost no time in repairing to the rendezvous in the little wood the next morning

You were at our master's yesterday she said at once to Alexey what do you think of our young mistress?

Alexey replied that he had not noticed her

That's a pity! replied Liza

Why so? asked Alexey

Because I wanted to ask you if it is true what they say—

What do they say?

Is it true as they say that I am very much like her?

What nonsense! She is a perfect freak compared with you

Oh sir it is very wrong of you to speak like that Our young mistress is so fair and so stylish! How could I be compared with her!

Alexey vowed to her that she was more beautiful than all the fair young ladies in creation and in order to pacify her completely, he began to describe her mistress in such comical terms that Liza laughed heartily

But, said she with a sigh even though our young mistress may be ridiculous I am but a poor ignorant thing in comparison with her

Oh! said Alexey is that anything to break your heart about? If you wish it, I will soon teach you to read and write

Yes indeed said Liza why shouldn't I try?

Very well my dear we will commence at once

They sat down—Alexey drew from his pocket a pencil and note book and Akulina learnt the alphabet with as astonishing rapidity Alexey could not suffice any adm. her intelligence The following morning she wished to try to write At first the pencil refused to obey her but after a few minutes she was able to trace the letters with tolerable accuracy

It is really wonderful! said Alexey Our method certainly produces quicker results than the Lancaster system

And indeed at the third lesson Akulina began to spell through Natalya the Boyar's Daughter interrupting her reading by observations which really filled Alexey with astonishment and she filled a whole sheet of paper with aphorisms drawn from the same story

A week went by and a correspondence was established between them Their letter box was the hollow of an old oak tree and Nastya acted as their messenger Thither Alexey carried his letters written in a bold round hand and there he found on plain blue paper the scrawls of his beloved Akulina perceptibly began to acquire an elegant style of expression and her mind developed noticeably

Meanwhile, the recently formed acquaintance between Ivan Petrovich Berestov and Grigory Ivanovich Muromsky soon became transformed into a sincere friendship under the following circumstances Muromsky frequently reflected that on the death of Ivan Petrovich all his possessions would pass into the hands of Alexey Ivanovich in which case the latter would be one of the wealthiest landed proprietors in the province and there would be nothing to hinder him from marrying Liza The elder Berestov on his side although recognizing in his neighbor a certain extravagance (or as he termed it English folly) was perfectly ready to admit that he possessed many excellent qualities as for example his rare resourcefulness Grigory Ivanovich was closely related to Count Pronsky a man of distinction and of great influence The Count could be of great service to Alexey and Muromsky (so thought Ivan Petrovich) would doubtless rejoice to see his daughter marry so advantageously. By dint of constantly dwelling upon this idea the two old men came at last to communicate their thoughts to one another. They embraced each other, both promised to do their best to arrange the matter, and they immediately set to work, each on his own side. Muromsky foresaw that he would have some difficulty in persuading his Betsy to become more intimately acquainted with Alexey, whom she had not seen since the memorable dinner. It seemed to him that they had not liked each other much; at least Alexey had not paid any further visits to Priluchino, and Liza had retired to her room every time that Ivan Petrovich had honored them with a visit.

But thought Grigory Ivanovich, if Alexey came to see us every day, Betsy could not help falling in love with him. That is in the nature of things. Time will settle everything.

Ivan Petrovich was less uneasy about the success of his designs. That same evening he summoned his son to his study, lit his pipe, and, after a short pause, said:

"Well, Alyosha, you have not said anything for a long time about military service. Or has the Hussar uniform lost its charm for you?"

No, father, replied Alexey respectfully, "but I see that you do not like the idea of my entering the Hussars, and it is my duty to obey you."

Good, replied Ivan Petrovich. I see that you are an obedient son; that is a consolation to me. On my side, I do not wish to compel you. I do not want to force you to enter the civil service at once, but in the meanwhile I intend you to get married.

To whom, father? asked Alexey in astonishment.

To Lizaveta Grigoryevna Muromsky, replied Ivan Petrovich. She is a fine bride, is she not?

Father, I have not thought of marriage yet.

You have not thought of it and therefore I have thought of it for you

As you please but I do not care for Liza Muromsky in the least

You will get to like her afterwards Love comes with time

I do not feel capable of making her happy

Do not fret about making her happy What? Is this how you respect your father's wish? Very well!

As you choose I do not wish to marry and I will not marry

You will marry or I will curse you and as for my estate as true as there is a God in heaven I will sell it and squander the money and not leave you a farthing I will give you three days to think about the matter and in the meantime keep out of my sight

Alexey knew that when his father once took an idea into his head even a nail would not drive it out as Taras Skotinin¹ says in the comedy But Alexey took after his father and was just as head strong as he was He went to his room and began to reflect upon the limits of paternal authority Then his thoughts reverted to Lizaveta Grigoryevna to his father's solemn vow to make him a beggar and last of all to Akulina For the first time he saw clearly that he was passionately in love with her the romantic idea of marrying a peasant girl and of living by the labor of his hands came into his head and the more he thought of such a decisive step the more reasonable did it seem to him For some time the interviews in the wood had ceased on account of the rainy weather He wrote Akulina a letter in the neatest handwriting and in the wildest style informing her of the misfortune that threatened them and offering her his hand He took the letter at once to the post-office in the wood and then went to bed well satisfied with himself

The next day Alexey, still firm in his resolution rode over early in the morning to visit Muromsky in order to explain matters frankly to him. He hoped to excite his generosity and win him over to his side

Is Grigory Ivanovich at home? he asked stopping his horse in front of the steps of the Priluchino mansion

No sir replied the servant Grigory Ivanovich rode out early this morning and has not yet returned

How annoying! thought Alexey Is Lizaveta Grigoryevna at home then? he asked

Yes sir

Alexey sprang from his horse, gave the reins to the lackey and entered without being announced

Everything is going to be decided now, thought he directing his steps toward the parlor I will explain everything to Lizaveta herself

He entered and then stood still as if petrified! Lizaveta no longer in a sarafan but in a white morning dress was sitting in front of the window reading his letter she was so preoccupied that she had not heard him enter

Alexey could not restrain an exclamation of joy Lizaveta started raised her head uttered a cry, and wished to fly from the room But he held her back

Akulinal Akulinal

Lizaveta endeavored to free herself from his grasp

Mais laissez moi donc Monsieur! Mais êtes vous fou? she repeated turning away

Akulinal my dear Akulinal he repeated kissing her hands

Miss Jackson a witness of this scene knew not what to think of it At that moment the door opened and Grigory Ivanovich entered the room

Aha! said Muromsky it seems that you have already arranged matters between you

The reader will spare me the unnecessary obligation of describing the denouement

Oho!*

THERE was a card party at the rooms of Narumov of the Horse Guards. The long winter night passed away imperceptibly, and it was five o'clock in the morning before the company sat down to supper. Those who had won were with a good appetite; the others sat staring absently at their empty plates. When the champagne appeared, however, the conversation became more animated, and all took a part in it.

And how did you fare, Surin? asked the host.

Oh I lost as usual I must confess that I am unlucky I never raise the original stakes I always keep cool I never allow anything to put me out and yet I always lose!

And you have never been tempted? You have never staked on several cards in succession? Your firmness astonishes me

But what do you think of Hermann? said one of the guests pointing to a young engineer he has never had a card in his hand in his life he has never in his life doubled the stake and yet he sits here till five o'clock in the morning watching our play

Play interests me very much said Hermann but I am not in the position to sacrifice the necessary in the hope of winning the superfluous

Hermann is a German he is prudent—that is all!" observed Tomsy But if there is one person that I cannot understand it is my grandmother the Countess Anna Fedotovna

How? What? cried the guests

I cannot understand continued Tomsy "how it is that my grandmother does not punt

What is there remarkable about an old lady of eighty not gambling? said Narumov

Then you know nothing about her?

No really haven't the faintest idea

Oh! then listen You must know that about sixty years ago my grandmother went to Paris where she created quite a sensation People used to run after her to catch a glimpse of la Venus moscovite Riche lieu courted her and my grandmother maintains that he almost blew out his brains in consequence of her cruelty At that time ladies used to play faro On one occasion at the Court she lost a very considerable sum to the Duke of Orleans On returning home, my grandmother removed the patches from her face took off her hoops, informed my grandfather of her loss at the gaming table, and ordered him to pay the money. My deceased grandfather as far as I remember was a sort of butler to my grandmother. He dreaded her like fire but, on hearing of such a heavy loss, he almost went out of his mind. He calculated the various sums she had lost and pointed out to her that in six months she had spent half a million. That neither their Moscow nor Siratov estates were near Paris and finally refused point blank to pay the debt. My grandmother slapped his face and slept by herself as a sign of her displeasure. The next day she sent for her husband hoping that this domestic punishment had produced an effect upon him but she found him inflexible. For the first time in her life, she condescended to offer reasons and explanations. She thought she could convince him by pointing out to him that there are debts and debts and that there is a great difference between a Prince and a coachmaker. But it was all in vain. Grandfather was in revolt. He said no and that was all. My grandmother did not know what to do. She was on friendly terms with a very remarkable man. You have heard of Count St. Germain about whom so many marvelous stories are told. You know that he represented himself as the Wandering Jew as the discoverer of the elixir of life of the philosopher's stone, and so forth. Some laughed at him as a charlatan but Casanova in his memoirs says that he was a spy. But be that as it may St. Germain in spite of the mystery surrounding him was a man of decent appearance and had an amiable manner in company. Even to this day my grandmother is in love with him and becomes quite angry if anyone speaks disrespectfully of him. My grandmother knew that St. Germain had large sums of money at his disposal. She resolved to have recourse to him and she wrote a letter to him asking him to come to her with out delay The queer old man immediately waited upon her and found her overwhelmed with grief She described to him in the blackest colors the barbarity of her husband and ended by declaring that she placed all her hopes in his friendship and graciousness

St Germain reflected

I could advance you the sum you want said he but I know that you would not rest easy until you had paid me back and I should not like to bring fresh troubles upon you But there is another way of getting out of your difficulty you can win back your money

But my dear Count replied my grandmother I tell you that we haven't any money left

Money is not necessary replied St Germain be pleased to listen to me

Then he revealed to her a secret for which each of us would give a good deal

The young gamblers listened with increased attention Tomsky lit his pipe pulled at it, and continued

That same evening my grandmother went to Versailles au jeu de la Reine The Duke of Orleans kept the bank my grandmother excused herself in an off handed manner for not having yet paid her debt, by inventing some little story and then began to play against him She chose three cards and played them one after the other all three won at the start and my grandmother recovered all that she had lost

Mere chance! said one of the guests

A fairy tale! observed Hermann

Perhaps they were marked cards! said a third

I do not think so replied Tomsky gravely

What! said Narumov you have a grandmother who knows how to hit upon three lucky cards in succession and you have never yet succeeded in getting the secret of it out of her?

That's the deuce of it! replied Tomsky she had four sons, one of whom was my father all four are desperate gamblers and yet not to one of them did she ever reveal her secret although it would not have been a bad thing either for them or for me But this is what I heard from my uncle, Count Ivan Ilyich and he assured me on his honor that it was true The late Chaplitzky—the same who died in poverty after having squandered millions—once lost, in his youth about three hundred thousand rubles—to Zorich if I remember rightly He was in despair My grandmother who was always very hard on extravagant young men took pity however upon Chaplitzky She mentioned to him three cards telling him to play them one after the other, at the same time exacting from him a solemn promise that he would never play cards again as long as he lived Chaplitzky then went to his victorious opponent and they began a fresh game On the first card he staked fifty thousand rubles and won at once he doubled the stake and won again doubled it again and won not only all he had lost but something over and above that

But it is time to go to bed it is a quarter to six already

And indeed it was already beginning to dawn the young men emptied their glasses and then took leave of one another

Society Talk

THE OLD Countess X was seated in her dressing room in front of her looking glass Three maids stood around her. One held a small pot of rouge, another a box of hair pins, and the third a tall cap with bright red ribbons. The Countess had no longer the slightest pretensions to beauty—hers had faded long ago—but she still preserved all the habits of her youth, dressed in strict accordance with the fashion of the seventies, and made as long and as careful a toilette as she would have done sixty years previously. Near the window, at an embroidery frame, sat a young lady, her ward.

Good morning, grand maman! said a young officer entering the room. Bonjour Mademoiselle Lise. Grand maman, I have a favor to ask of you."

What is it, Paul?

I want you to let me introduce one of my friends to you, and to allow me to bring him to the ball on Friday.

Bring him direct to the ball and introduce him to me there. Were you at N's yesterday?

Yes, everything went off very pleasantly, and dancing kept up until five o'clock. How beautiful Mme Yeletzka was!

But my dear, what is there beautiful about her? You should have seen her grandmother, Princess Darya Petrovna! By the way, she must have aged very much. Princess Darya Petrovna.

How do you mean aged? cried Tomsky thoughtlessly. She died seven years ago.

The young lady raised her head and made a sign to the young man. He then remembered that the old Countess was never to be informed of the death of any of her contemporaries, and he put his lip. But the Countess heard the news with the greatest indifference.

Died! said she, and I did not know it. We were appointed maids of honor at the same time, and when we were being presented the Empress

And the Countess for the hundredth time related the anecdote to her grandson

Come Paul said she, when she had finished her story help me to get up Lizanka where is my snuff box?

And the Countess with her three maids went behind a screen to finish her toilette Tomsky was left alone with the young lady

Who is the gentleman you wish to introduce to the Countess? asked Lizaveta Ivanovna in a whisper

Narumov Do you know him?

No Is he in the army or is he a civilian?

In the army

"Is he in the Engineers?"

No in the Cavalry What made you think that he was in the Engineers?

The young lady smiled but made no reply

Paul cried the Countess from behind the screen send me some new novel only pray not the kind they write nowadays

What do you mean grand maman?

That is a novel in which the hero strangles neither his father nor his mother and in which there are no drowned bodies I have a great horror of them"

There are no such novels nowadays Would you like a Russian one?

Are there any Russian novels? Send me one my dear please send me one!

Good bye granda maman I am in a hurry
Good bye Lizaveta Ivanovna What then made you think that Narumov was in the Engineers?

And Tomsky withdrew from the dressing room

Lizaveta Ivanovna was left alone she laid aside her work and began to look out of the window A few moments afterwards from behind a corner house on the other side of the street a young officer appeared A deep blush covered her cheeks she took up her work again and bent her head over the frame At the same moment the Countess returned completely dressed

Order the carriage Lizaveta said she we will go out for a drive

Lizaveta arose from the frame and began to put away her work

What is the matter with you my dear are you deaf? cried the Countess Order the carriage to be got ready at once

I will do so this moment replied the young lady and ran into the ante room

A servant entered and gave the Countess some books from Prince Pavel Alexandrovich

Tell him that I am much obliged to him said the Countess Lizaveta! Lizaveta! where are you running to?

I am going to dress

There is plenty of time my dear Sit down here Open the first volume and read aloud to me

Her companion took the book and read a few lines

Louder said the Countess What is the matter with you my dear? Have you lost your voice? Wait—give me that footstool—a little nearer—that will do!

Lizaveta read two more pages The Countess yawned

Put the book down said she what a lot of non sense! Send it back to Prince Pavel with my thanks

But where is the carriage?

The carriage is ready said Lizaveta looking out into the street

How is it that you are not dressed? said the Countess I must always wait for you It is intolerable, my dear!

Liza hastened to her room She had not been there two minutes before the Countess began to ring with all her might The three maids came running in at one door and the valet at another

How is it that you don't come when I ring for you? said the Countess Tell Lizaveta Ivanovna that I am waiting for her

Lizaveta returned with her hat and cloak on

At last you are here! said the Countess But why such an elaborate toilette? Whom do you intend to captivate? What sort of weather is it? It seems rather windy

No Your Ladyship it is very calm replied the valet

You always speak thoughtlessly Open the window So it is windy and bitterly cold Unharness the horses Lizaveta we won't go out--there was no need for you to deck yourself out like that

And that's my life! thought Lizaveta Ivanovna

And in truth Lizaveta Ivanovna was a very unfortunate creature It is bitter to eat the bread of another says Dante and hard to climb his stair But who can know what the bitterness of dependence is so well as the poor companion of an old lady of quality? The Countess X had by no means a bad heart but she was capricious like a woman who had been spoilt by the world as well as avaricious and sunk in cold egoism like all old people who are no longer capable of affection and whose thoughts are with the past and not the present She participated in all the vanities of the great world went to balls where she sat in a corner painted and dressed in old fashioned style like an ugly but indispensable ornament of the ballroom the guests on entering approached her and bowed profoundly, as if in accordance with a set ceremony but after that nobody took any further notice of her She received the whole town at her house and observed the strictest etiquette although she could no longer recog nize people. Her numerous domestics growing fat and old in her ante-chamber and servants' hall did just as they liked and vied with each other in robbing the moribund old woman. Lizaveta Ivanovna was the martyr of the household. She poured tea and was reprimanded for using too much sugar; she read novels aloud to the Countess and the faults of the author were visited upon her head; she accompanied the Countess in her walks and was held answerable for the weather or the state of the pavement. A salary was attached to the post but she very rarely received it although she was expected to dress like everybody else that is to say like very few indeed. In society she played the most pitiable role. Everybody knew her and nobody paid her any attention. At balls she danced only when a partner was wanted and ladies would only take hold of her arm when it was necessary to lead her out of the room to attend to their dresses. She had a great deal of amour propre and felt her position keenly and she looked about her with impatience for a deliverer to come to her rescue but the young men calculating in their giddiness did not condescend to pay her any attention although Lizaveta Ivanovna was a hundred times prettier than the bare faced and cold hearted marriageable girls around whom they hovered. Many a time did she quietly slink away from the dull and elegant drawing room to go and cry in her own poor little room in which stood a screen a chest of drawers a looking glass and a painted bedstead and where a tallow candle burnt feebly in a copper candle stick.

One morning—this was about two days after the card party described at the beginning of this story and a week previous to the scene at which we have just assisted—Lizaveta Ivanovna was seated near the window at her embroidery frame when happening to look out into the street, she caught sight of a young officer of the Engineers standing motionless with his eyes fixed upon her window. She lowered her head and went on again with her work. About five minutes afterwards she looked out again—the young officer was still standing in the same place. Not being in the habit of coquetting with pa sion officers, she did not continue to gaze out into the street but went on sewing for a couple of hours without raising her head. Dinner was announced. She rose up and began to put her embroidery away but glancing casually out of the window, she perceived the officer again. This seemed to her very strange. After dinner she went to the window with a certain feeling of uneasiness but the officer was no longer there—and she thought no more about him.

A couple of days afterwards, just as she was stepping into the carriage with the Countess she saw him again. He was standing close to the entrance with his face half-concealed by his beaver collar, his black eyes flashing beneath his hat. Lizaveta felt alarmed though she knew not why and she trembled as she seated herself in the carriage.

On returning home she hastened to the window—the officer was standing in his accustomed place with his eyes fixed upon her. She drew back, a prey to curiosity and agitated by a feeling which was quite new to her.

From that time on not a day passed without the young officer making his appearance under the window at the customary hour. A spontaneous relationship was established between them. Sitting in her place at work she would feel his approach and raising her head she would look at him longer and longer each day. The young man seemed to be very grateful to her for it she saw with the sharp eye of youth how a sudden flush covered his pale cheeks each time that their glances met By the end of the week she smiled at him

When Tomskey asked permission of his grandmother the Countess to present one of his friends to her the young girl's heart beat violently But hearing that Narumov was not an engineer but in the Horse Guards she regretted that by her indiscreet question she had betrayed her secret to the volatile Tomskey

Hermann was the son of a Russified German from whom he had inherited a small fortune Being firmly convinced of the necessity of ensuring his independence Hermann did not touch even the interest on his capital but lived on his pay without allowing himself the slightest luxury Moreover he was reserved and ambitious and his companions rarely had an opportunity of making merry at the expense of his excessive parsimony He had strong passions and an ardent imagination but his firmness of disposition preserved him from the ordinary errors of youth Thus though a gambler at heart he never touched a card for he considered his position did not allow him—as he said—to risk the necessary in the hope of winning the superfluous yet he would sit for nights together at the card table and follow with feverish excitement the various turns of the game

The story of the three cards had produced a powerful impression upon his imagination and all night long he could think of nothing else If only he thought to himself the following evening as he wandered through St Petersburg if only the old Countess would reveal her secret to me! if she would only tell me the names of the three winning cards! Why should I not try my fortune? I must get introduced to her and win her favor—perhaps become her lover But all that will take time and she is eighty seven years old she might be dead in a week in a couple of days even!

And the story itself is it credible? No! Prudence moderation and work those are my three winning cards, that is what will increase my capital three fold sevenfold and procure for me ease and independence

Musing in this manner he walked on until he found himself in one of the principal streets of St Petersburg in front of a house of old fashioned architecture. The street was blocked with carriages one after the other they rolled up in front of the illuminated entrance Every minute there emerged from the coaches the shapely foot of a young beauty a spurred boot a striped stocking above a diplomatic shoe Fur coats and cloaks whisked past the majestic porter

Hermann stopped 'Whose house is this?' he asked the watchman at the corner

The Countess X's replied the watchman

Hermann trembled The strange story of the three cards again presented itself to his imagination He began walking up and down before the house thinking of its owner and her marvelous gift Returning late to his modest lodging he could not go to sleep for a long time and when at last he did doze off he could dream of nothing but cards green tables piles of bank notes and heaps of gold coins He played card after card firmly turning down the corners and won uninterruptedly raking in the gold and filling his pockets with the notes Waking up late the next morning he sighed over the loss of his imaginary wealth then went out again to wander about the streets and found himself once more in front of the Countess's house Some unknown power seemed to draw him thither He stopped and began to stare at the windows In one of these he saw the head of a black haired woman which was bent probably over some book or handwork The head was raised Hermann saw a fresh cheeked face and a pair of black eyes That moment decided his fate

A correspondence

LIZAVETA IVANOVNA had scarcely taken off her hat and cloak when the Countess sent for her and again ordered the carriage The vehicle drew up before the door and they prepared to take their seats Just at the moment when two footmen were assisting the old lady into the carriage Lizaveta saw her engine close beside the wheel he grasped her hand alarm caused her to lose her presence of mind and the young man disappeared—but not before leaving a letter in her hand She concealed it in her glove and during the whole of the drive she neither saw nor heard anything It was the custom of the Countess when out for an airing in her carriage to be constantly asking such questions as Who was that person that met u just now? What is the name of this bridge? What is written on that signboard? On this occasion however Lizaveta returned such vague and absurd answers that the Countess became angry with her

What is the matter with you my dear? she exclaimed Have you taken leave of your senses or what is it? Do you not hear me or understand what I say?

Heaven be thanked I am still in my right mind and speak plainly enough!

Lizaveta Ivanovna did not hear her On returning home she ran to her room and drew the letter out of her glove it was not sealed Lizaveta read it The letter contained a declaration of love it was tender, respectful and copied word for word from a German novel. But Lizaveta did not know anything of the German language and she was quite delighted with the letter.

For all that it troubled her exceedingly. For the first time in her life she was entering into secret and intimate relations with a young man. His boldness horrified her. She reproached herself for her imprudent behavior, and knew not what to do. Should she cease to sit at the window and by assuming an appearance of indifference toward him, put a check upon the young officer's desire to pursue her further? Should she send his letter back to him or should she answer him in a cold and resolute manner? There was nobody to whom she could turn in her perplexity for she had neither female friend nor adviser. At length she resolved to reply to him.

She sat down at her little writing table took pen and paper and began to think. Several times she began her letter and then tore it up the way she had expressed herself seemed to her either too indulgent or too severe. At last she succeeded in writing a few lines with which she felt satisfied.

I am convinced she wrote, that your intentions are honorable and that you do not wish to offend me by any imprudent action, but our acquaintance should not have begun in such a manner. I return you your letter and I hope that I shall never have any cause to complain of undeserved disrespect.

The next day as soon as Hermann made his appearance Lizaveta rose from her embroidery went into the drawing room opened the wicket and threw the letter into the street trusting to the young officer's alertness.

Hermann hastened forward picked it up and then repaired to a confectioner's shop. Breaking the seal of the envelope, he found inside it his own letter and Lizaveta's reply. He had expected this and he returned home very much taken up with his intrigue.

Three days afterward a bright-eyed young girl from a milliner's establishment brought Lizaveta a letter. Lizaveta opened it with great uneasiness, fearing that it was a demand for money, when suddenly she recognized Hermann's handwriting.

You have made a mistake, my dear, said she, this letter is not for me.

Oh, yes, it is for you, replied the pert girl without concealing a sly smile. Have the goodness to read it.

Lizaveta glanced at the letter. Hermann requested an interview.

It cannot be, said Lizaveta Ivanovna, alarmed both at the haste with which he had made his request and the manner in which it had been transmitted. This letter is certainly not for me.

And she tore it into fragments.

If the letter was not for you, why have you torn it up? said the girl. I should have given it back to the person who sent it.

Be good enough, my dear, said Lizaveta, disconcerted by this remark, not to bring me any more letters in future, and tell the person who sent you that he ought to be ashamed.

But Hermann was not the man to be thus put off. Every day Lizaveta received from him a letter, sent now in this way, now in that. They were no longer translated from the German. Hermann wrote them under the inspiration of passion, and spoke in his own language, and they bore full testimony to the inflexibility of his desire and the disordered condition of his uncontrollable imagination. Lizaveta no longer thought of sending them back to him; she became in intoxicated with them and began to reply to them and little by little her answers became longer and more affectionate. At last she threw out of the window to him the following letter.

This evening there is going to be a ball at the l'Embassy. The Countess will be there. We shall remain until two o'clock. This is your opportunity of seeing me alone. As soon as the Countess is gone the servants will very probably go out and there will be nobody left but the porter but he too, usually retires to his lodge. Come at half past eleven. Walk straight up stairs. If you meet anybody in the ante room ask if the Countess is at home. If you are told she is not there will be nothing left for you to do but to go away and return another time. But it is most probable that you will meet nobody. The maidservants all sit together in one room. On leaving the ante room turn to the left, and walk straight on until you reach the Countess's bedroom. In the bedroom behind a screen you will find two small doors: the one on the right leads to a study which the Countess never enters; the one on the left leads to a corridor at the end of which is a narrow winding staircase: this leads to my room.

Hermann quivered like a tiger as he waited for the appointed time. At ten o'clock in the evening he was already in front of the Countess's house. The weather was terrible: the wind was howling; the sleety snow fell in large flakes; the lamps emitted a feeble light; the streets were deserted; from time to time a sledge drawn by a sorry looking hack passed by; the driver on the look-out for a belated fare. Hermann stood there wearing nothing but his jacket: yet he felt neither the wind nor the snow.

At last the Countess's carriage drew up. Hermann saw two footmen carry out in their arms the bent form of the old lady wrapped in fables and immediately behind her clad in a light mantle and with a wreath of fresh flowers on her head followed Lizaveta. The door was closed. The carriage rolled away heavily through the yielding snow. The porter shut the street door the windows became dark.

Hermann began walking up and down near the deserted house at length he stopped under a lamp and glanced at his watch it was twenty minutes past eleven. He remained standing under the lamp his eyes fixed upon the watch impatiently waiting for the remaining minutes to pass. At half past eleven precisely Hermann ascended the steps of the house and made his way into the brightly illuminated vestibule. The porter was not there. Hermann ran up the stairs opened the door of the ante room and saw a footman sitting asleep in an antique soiled armchair under a lamp. With a light firm step Hermann walked past him. The reception room and the drawing room were in semi darkness. They were lit feebly by a lamp in the ante room.

Hermann entered the bedroom. Before an ikon-case filled with ancient ikons a golden sanctuary-lamp was burning. Armchairs upholstered in faded brocade and sofas the gilding of which was worn off and which were piled with down cushions stood in melancholy symmetry around the room the walls of which were hung with China silk. On the wall hung two portraits painted in Paris by Madame Lebrun. One of them represented a plump pink-cheeked man of about forty in a light green uniform and with a star on his breast the other—a beautiful young woman with an aquiline nose, curls at her temples and a rose in her powdered hair. In all the corners stood porcelain shepherds and shepherdesses clocks from the workshop of the celebrated Leroy boxes roulettes fans and the various gewgaws for ladies that were invented at the end of the last century together with Montgolfier's balloon and Mesmer's magnetism Hermann stepped behind the screen Behind it stood a little iron bed on the right was the door which led to the study on the left—the other which led to the corridor He opened the latter and saw the little winding staircase which led to the room of the poor ward But he retraced his steps and entered the dark study

The time passed slowly All was still The clock in the drawing room struck twelve in all the rooms one clock after another marked the hour and everything was quiet again Hermann stood leaning against the cold stove He was calm his heart beat regularly like that of a man resolved upon a dangerous but inevitable undertaking The clock struck one, then two and he heard the distant rumbling of carriage wheels In spite of himself, excitement seized him The carriage drew near and stopped He heard the sound of the carriage step being let down All was bustle within the house The servants were running hither and thither voices were heard and the house was lit up Three antiquated chamber maids entered the bedroom and they were shortly afterwards followed by the Countess who more dead than alive sank into an armchair Hermann peeped through a chink Lizaveta Ivanovna passed close by him and he heard her hurried steps as she hastened up her staircase For a moment his heart was assailed by something like remorse but the emotion was only transitory He stood petrified

The Countess began to undress before her looking glass Her cap decorated with roses was unpinned and then her powdered wig was removed from off her white and closely cropped head Hairpins fell in snows around her Her yellow satin dress embroidered with silver fell down at her swollen feet

Hermann witnessed the repulsive mysteries of her toilette at last the Countess was in her night-cap and night gown and in this costume more suitable to her age she appeared less hideous and terrifying

Like all old people in general the Countess suffered from sleeplessness Having undressed she seated herself at the window in an armchair and dismissed her maids The candles were taken away and once more the room was lit only by the sanctuary lamp The Countess sat there looking quite yellow moving her flaccid lips and swaying from side to side Her dull eyes expressed complete vacancy of mind and looking at her one would have thought that the rocking of her body was not voluntary but was produced by the action of some concealed galvanic mechanism

Suddenly the death like face changed incredibly The lips ceased to move the eyes became animated before the Countess stood a stranger

Do not be alarmed for Heaven's sake do not be alarmed! said he in a low but distinct voice I have no intention of doing you any harm I have only come to ask a favor of you

The old woman looked at him in silence, as if she had not heard what he had said Hermann thought that she was deaf and bending down toward her ear he repeated what he had said The old woman remained silent as before

You can insure the happiness of my life continued Hermann and it will cost you nothing I know that you can name three cards in succession—

Hermann stopped The Countess appeared now to understand what was asked of her she seemed to be seeking words with which to reply

It was a joke she replied at last I swear it was only a joke

This is no joking matter replied Hermann angrily Remember Chaplitzky, whom you helped to win back what he had lost

The Countess became visibly uneasy. Her features expressed strong emotion but she soon lapsed into her former insensibility.

Can you not name me these three winning cards? continued Hermann

The Countess remained silent. Hermann continued

For whom are you preserving your secret? For your grandsons? They are rich enough without it they do not know the worth of money. Your cards would be of no use to a spendthrift. He who cannot preserve his paternal inheritance, will die in want even though he had a demon at his service. I am not a man of that sort. I know the value of money. Your three cards will not be wasted on me. Come!

He paused and tremblingly awaited her reply. The Countess remained silent. Hermann fell upon his knees.

If your heart has ever known the feeling of love aid me if you remember its rapture if you have ever smiled at the cry of your new born child if your breast has ever throbbed with any human feeling I entreat you by the feelings of a wife a lover a mother by all that is most sacred in life not to reject my plea. Reveal to me your secret. Of what use is it to you? May be it is connected with some terrible sin the loss of eternal bliss some bargain with the devil. Consider—you are old you have not long to live—I am ready to take your sins upon my soul. Only reveal to me your secret. Remember that the happiness of a man is in your hands that not only I but my children grandchildren and great grandchildren will bless your memory and reverence it as something sacred.

The old woman answered not a word.

Hermann rose to his feet.

You old witch! he exclaimed clenching his teeth then I will make you answer!

With these words he drew a pistol from his pocket

At the sight of the pistol the Countess for the second time exhibited strong emotion. She shook her head and raised her hands as if to protect herself from the shot then she fell backward and remained motionless.

Come an end to this childish nonsense! said Hermann taking hold of her hand. I ask you for the last time will you tell me the names of your three cards or will you not?

The Countess made no reply. Hermann perceived that she was dead!

Homme sans mœurs et sans religion!

LIZAVETA IVANOVNA was sitting in her room still in her ball dress lost in deep thought. On returning home she had hastily dismissed the sleepy maid who reluctantly came forward to assist her saying that she would undress herself and with a trembling heart had gone up to her own room hoping to find Hermann there, but yet desiring not to find him. At the first glance she convinced herself that he was not there and she thanked her fate for the obstacle which had prevented their meeting. She sat down without undressing and began to recall to mind all the circumstances which in so short a time had carried her so far. It was not three weeks since the time when she had first seen the young man from the window—and she already was in correspondence with him and he had succeeded in inducing her to grant him a nocturnal tryst! She knew his name only through his having written it at the bottom of some of his letters, she had never spoken to him had never heard his voice and had never heard anything of him until that evening. But strange to say that very evening at the ball Tomsky being piqued with the young Princess Pauline N who, contrary to her usual custom did not flirt with him wished to revenge himself by assuming an air of indifference he therefore engaged Lizaveta Ivanovna and danced an endless mazurka with her. All the time he kept teasing her about her partiality for officers in the Engineers he assured her that he knew far more than she could have supposed and some of his jests were so happily aimed that Lizaveta thought several times that her secret was known to him.

From whom have you learnt all this? she asked smiling.

From a friend of a person very well known to you replied Tomsky from a very remarkable man.

And who is this remarkable man?

His name is Hermann.

Lizaveta made no reply but her hands and feet turned to ice.

This Hermann continued Tomsky is a truly romantic character. He has the profile of a Napoleon and the soul of a Mephistopheles. I believe that he has at least three crimes upon his conscience. How pale you are!

I have a headache. But what did this Hermann—or whatever his name is—tell you?

Hermann is very much dissatisfied with his friend he says that in his place he would act very differently.

I even think that Hermann himself has designs upon you at least he listens not indifferently to his friend's enamored exclamations.

"But where has he seen me?"

In church perhaps or promenading—God alone knows where. It may have been in your room while you were asleep for he is capable of it.

Three ladies approaching him with the question oubli ou regret? interrupted the conversation which had become so tantalizingly interesting to Lizaveta.

The lady chosen by Tomsky was the Princess Pauline herself. She succeeded in effecting a reconciliation with him by making an extra turn in the dance and managing to delay resuming her seat. On returning to his place Tomsky thought no more either of Hermann or Lizaveta. She longed to renew the interrupted conversation but the mazurka came to an end and shortly afterward the old Countess took her departure.

Tomsky's words were nothing more than the small talk of the mazurka but they sank deep into the soul of the young dreamer. The portrait sketched by Tomsky agreed with the picture she had formed in her own mind and that image rendered commonplace by current novels terrified and fascinated her imagination. She was now sitting with her bare arms crossed and her head still adorned with flowers was bowed over her half-uncovered breast. Suddenly the door opened and Hermann entered. She shuddered.

"Where have you been?" she asked in a frightened whisper.

In the old Countess's bedroom replied Hermann. I have just left her. The Countess is dead."

My God! What are you saying?

And I am afraid added Hermann that I am the cause of her death.

Lizaveta looked at him and Tomsky's words found an echo in her soul. This man has at least three crimes upon his conscience! Hermann sat down by the window near her and related all that had happened.

Lizaveta listened to him in terror. So all those passionate letters, those ardent demands, this bold obstinate pursuit—all this was not love! Money—that was what his soul yearned for! She could not satisfy his desire and make him happy! The poor girl had been nothing but the blind accomplice of a robber of the murderer of her aged benefactress! She wept bitter tears of belated agonized repentance. Hermann gazed at her in silence; his heart, too, was tormented, but neither the tears of the poor girl, nor the wonderful charm of her beauty, enhanced by her grief, could produce any impression upon his hardened soul. He felt no pricking of conscience at the thought of the dead old woman. One thing only horrified him, the irreparable loss of the secret which he had expected would bring him wealth.

You are a monster! said Lizaveta at last.

I did not wish her death, replied Hermann. My pistol is not loaded.

Both grew silent.

The day began to dawn. Lizaveta extinguished her candle; a pale light illumined her room. She wiped her tear-stained eyes and raised them toward Hermann; he was sitting on the window sill, with his arms folded and frowning fiercely. In this attitude he bore a striking resemblance to the portrait of Napoleon. This resemblance struck even Lizaveta Ivanovna.

How shall I get you out of the house? said she at last. I thought of conducting you down the secret staircase, but in that case it would be necessary to go through the Countess's bedroom, and I am afraid.

Tell me how to find this secret staircase—I will go alone.

Lizaveta arose, took from her drawer a key, handed it to Hermann, and gave him the necessary instructions.

Hermann pressed her cold unresponsive hand kissed her bowed head and left the room

He descended the winding staircase and once more entered the Countess's bedroom The dead old woman sat as if petrified her face expressed profound tranquillity Hermann stopped before her and gazed long and earnestly at her as if he wished to convince himself of the terrible reality at last he entered the study felt behind the tapestry for the door and then began to descend the dark staircase agitated by strange emotions At this very hour thought he some sixty years ago a young gallant who has long been molding in his grave may have stolen down this very staircase perhaps coming from the very same bedroom wearing an embroidered caftan with his hair dressed a la perruque royale and pressing to his heart his three cornered hat and the heart of his aged mistress has only today ceased to beat

At the bottom of the staircase Hermann found a door which he opened with the same key and found himself in a corridor which led him into the street

That night the deceased Baroness von W appeared to me She was clad all in white and said to me How are you Mr Counselor?

Swedenborg

THREE days after the fatal night at nine o'clock in the morning Hermann repaired to the Convent of — where the burial service for the deceased Countess was to be held Although feeling no remorse he could not altogether stifle the voice of conscience which kept repeating to him You are the murderer of the old woman¹ While he had little true faith he was very superstitious, and believing that the dead Countess might exercise an evil influence on his life, he resolved to be present at her funeral in order to ask her pardon

The church was full It was with difficulty that Her mann made his way through the crowd The coffin stood on a sumptuous catafalque under a velvet baldachin The deceased lay within it her hands crossed upon her breast and wearing a lace cap and a white satin gown Around the catafalque stood the members of her household the servants in black castans with armorial ribbons upon their shoulders, and candles in their hands the relatives—children grandchildren and great grandchildren—in deep mourning

Nobody wept tears would have been une affectation The Countess was so old that her death could have surprised nobody and her relatives had long looked upon her as not among the living A famous preacher delivered the funeral oration In simple and touching words he described the peaceful passing away of the saintly woman whose long life had been a serene moving preparation for a Christian end The angel of death found her said the preacher engaged in pious meditation and waiting for the midnight bridegroom

The service concluded in an atmosphere of melancholy decorum The relatives went forward first to bid farewell to the deceased Then followed the numerous acquaintances who had come to render the last homage to her who for so many years had participated in their frivolous amusements After these followed the members of the Countess's household The last of these was the old housekeeper who was of the same age as the deceased Two young women led her forward supporting her by the arms She had not strength enough to bow down to the ground—she was the only one to shed a few tears and kiss the cold hand of her mistress

Hermann now resolved to approach the coffin. He bowed down to the ground and for several minutes lay on the cold floor, which was strewn with fir boughs; at last he arose as pale as the deceased Countess herself, ascended the steps of the catafalque and bent over the corpse.

At that moment it seemed to him that the dead woman darted a mocking look at him and winked with one eye. Hermann started back, took a false step and fell to the ground. He was lifted up. At the same moment Lizaveta Ivanovna was carried into the vestibule of the church in a faint. This episode disturbed for some minutes the solemnity of the gloomy ceremony. Among the congregation arose a muffled murmur, and the lean chamberlain, a near relative of the deceased, whispered in the ear of an Englishman who was standing near him, that the young officer was a natural son of the Countess, to which the Englishman coldly replied: "Oh!"

During the whole of that day Hermann was exceedingly perturbed. Dining in an out-of-the-way restaurant, he drank a great deal of wine, contrary to his usual custom, in the hope of allaying his inward agitation. But the wine only served to excite his imagination still more. On returning home, he threw himself upon his bed without undressing and fell into a deep sleep.

When he woke up it was already night, and the moon was shining into the room. He looked at his watch: it was a quarter to three. Sleep had left him; he sat down upon his bed and thought of the funeral of the old Countess.

At that moment somebody in the street looked in at his window and immediately passed on again. Her mann paid no attention to this incident. A few moments afterward he heard the door of the ante room open. Hermann thought that it was his orderly drunk as usual returning from some nocturnal expedition but presently he heard footsteps that were unknown to him. somebody was shuffling softly across the floor in slippers. The door opened and a woman dressed in white entered the room. Hermann mistook her for his old nurse and wondered what could bring her there at that hour of the night. But the white woman glided rapidly across the room and stood before him—and Hermann recognized the Countess!

I have come to you against my will she said in a firm voice but I have been ordered to grant your request. Three seven ace will win for you if played in succession but only on these conditions that you do not play more than one card in twenty four hours and that you never play again during the rest of your life. I forgive you my death on condition that you marry my ward Lizaveta Ivanovna.

With these words she turned round very quietly walked with a shuffling gait toward the door and disappeared. Hermann heard the street-door bang and he saw someone look in at him through the window again.

For a long time Hermann could not recover himself. Then he went into the next room. His orderly was asleep upon the floor, and he had much difficulty in waking him. The orderly was drunk as usual and nothing could be got out of him. The street door was locked. Hermann returned to his room lit his candle and set down an account of his vision.

VI

Attendez!

How dare you say attendez to me?

Your Excellency I said Attendez sir "

TWO FIXED ideas can no more exist together in the moral world than two bodies can occupy one and the same place in the physical world. Three seven ace soon drove out of Hermann's mind the thought of the dead Countess. Three seven ace were perpetually running through his head and continually on his lips. If he saw a young girl he would say, How slender she is! quite like the three of hearts. If anybody asked

What is the time? he would reply, Five minutes to seven. Every stout man that he saw reminded him of the ace. Three, seven ace haunted him in his sleep and assumed all possible shapes. The three bloomed before him in the form of a magnificent flower, the seven was represented by a Gothic portal and the ace became transformed into a gigantic spider. One thought alone occupied his whole mind—to make use of the secret which he had purchased so dearly. He thought of applying for a furlough so as to travel abroad. He wanted to go to Paris and force fortune to yield a treasure to him in the public gambling houses there. Chance spared him all this trouble.

There was in Moscow a society of wealthy gamblers presided over by the celebrated Chekalinsky who had passed all his life at the card table and had amassed millions accepting bills of exchange for his winnings and paying his losses in ready money. His long experience secured for him the confidence of his companions and his open house, his famous cook, and his agreeable and cheerful manner gained for him the respect of the public. He came to St Petersburg. The young men of the capital flocked to his rooms, forgetting balls for cards, and preferring the temptations of faro to the seductions of flirting. Narumov conducted Hermann to Chekalinsky's residence.

They passed through a suite of magnificent rooms filled with courteous attendants. Several generals and privy counselors were playing whist; young men were lolling carelessly upon the velvet-covered sofas, eating ices and smoking pipes. In the drawing room, at the head of a long table, around which crowded about a score of players, sat the master of the house, keeping the bank. He was a man of about sixty years of age, of a very dignified appearance; his head was covered with silvery white hair; his full florid countenance expressed good nature, and his eyes twinkled with a perpetual smile. Narumov introduced Hermann to him. Chekalinsky shook him by the hand in a friendly manner, requested him not to stand on ceremony, and then went on dealing.

The game lasted a long time. On the table lay more than thirty cards. Chekalinsky paused after each throw, in order to give the players time to arrange their cards and note down their losses; listened politely to their requests, and more politely still, straightened out the corners of cards that some absent-minded player's hand had turned down. At last the game was finished. Chekalinsky huffled the cards and prepared to deal again.

"Allow me to play a card," said Hermann, stretching out his hand from behind a stout gentleman who was punting.

Chekalinsky smiled and bowed silently, as a sign of acquiescence. Narumov laughingly congratulated Hermann on ending his long abstention from cards, and wished him a lucky beginning.

Here goes! said Hermann writing the figure with chalk on the back of his card

How much sir? asked the banker screwing up his eyes excuse me I cannot see quite clearly

Forty seven thousand replied Hermann

At these words every head in the room turned suddenly round, and all eyes were fixed upon Hermann

He has taken leave of his senses! thought Narumov

Allow me to observe said Chekalinsky with his eternal smile that that is a very high stake nobody here has ever staked more than two hundred and seventy five rubles at a time

Well retorted Hermann do you accept my card or not?

Chekalinsky bowed with the same look of humble acquiescence

I only wish to inform you said he that enjoying the full confidence of my partners I can only play for ready money For my own part I am of course quite convinced that your word is sufficient but for the sake of order and because of the accounts I must ask you to put the money on your card

Hermann drew from his pocket a bank note and handed it to Chekalinsky who after examining it in a cursory manner placed it on Hermann's card

He began to deal On the right a nine turned up and on the left a three

I win! said Hermann showing his card

A murmur of astonishment arose among the players Chekalinsky frowned but the smile quickly returned to his face

Do you wish me to settle with you? he said to Hermann

If you please replied the latter

Chekalinsky drew from his pocket a number of bank notes and paid up at once Hermann took his money and left the table Narumov could not recover from his astonishment Hermann drank a glass of lemonade and went home

The next evening he again appeared at Chekalinsky's The host was dealing Hermann walked up to the table the punters immediately made room for him Chekalinsky greeted him with a gracious bow

Hermann waited for the next game took a card and placed upon it his forty seven thousand rubles together with his winnings of the previous evening

Chekalinsky began to deal A knave turned up on the right a seven on the left

Hermann showed his seven

There was a general exclamation Chekalinsky was obviously disturbed but he counted out the ninety four thousand rubles and handed them over to Hermann who pocketed them in the coolest manner possible and immediately left the house

The next evening Hermann appeared again at the table Everyone was expecting him The generals and privy counselors left their whist in order to watch such extraordinary play The young officers jumped up from their sofas and even the servants crowded into the room All pressed round Hermann The other players left off punting impatient to see how it would end Hermann stood at the table and prepared to play alone against the pale but still smiling Chekalinsky Each opened a new pack of cards Chekalinsky shuffled Hermann took a card and covered it with a pile of bank notes It was like a duel Deep silence reigned

Chekalinsky began to deal his hands trembled On the right a queen turned up, and on the left an ace

Ace wins! cried Hermann showing his card

Your queen has lost said Chekalinsky sweetly

Hermann started instead of an ace there lay before him the queen of spades! He could not believe his eyes nor could he understand how he had made such a mistake

At that moment it seemed to him that the queen of spades screwed up her eyes and sneered. He was struck by the remarkable resemblance

The old woman! he exclaimed in terror

Chekalinsky gathered up his winnings. For some time Hermann remained perfectly motionless. When at last he left the table the room buzzed with loud talk

Splendidly punted! said the players. Chekalinsky shuffled the cards afresh and the game went on as usual

CONCLUSION

Hermann went out of his mind. He is now confined in room Number 17 of the Obukhov Hospital. He never answers any questions but he constantly mutters with unusual rapidity. Three seven ace! Three, seven queen!

KIRDJALI

KIRDJALI was by birth a Bulgarian Kirdjali ¹ the Turkish language signifies a knight a dare devil His real name I do not know

Kirdjali with his brigandage brought terror upon the whole of Moldavia In order to give some idea of him I will relate one of his exploits One night he and the Arnaut Michaelaki fell together upon a Bulgarian village They set it on fire at both ends and began to go from hut to hut Kirdjali cut throats and Michaelaki carried off the booty Both shouted Kirdjali! Kirdjali! The whole village took to flight

When Alexander Ypsilanti ² proclaimed the revolt and began to collect his army Kirdjali brought him several of his old companions The real object of the Hetaeria was but ill understood by them but was presented an opportunity for getting rich at the expense of the Turks and perhaps of the Moldavians and that was plain to them

Alexander Ypsilanti was personally brave but he did not possess the qualities necessary for the role which he had assumed with such ardor and such want of caution He did not know how to manage the people whom he was obliged to lead They had neither respect for him nor confidence in him After the un happy battle in which the flower of Greek youth perished Iordaki Olimbioti persuaded him to retire and he himself took his place Ypsilanti escaped to the borders of Austria and thence sent his curses to the men whom he called traitors cowards and scoundrels These cowards and scoundrels for the most part perished within the walls of the monastery of Seko or on the banks of the Pruth desperately defending themselves against an enemy outnumbering them ten to one

TRANSLATOR'S NOTE

Kirdjali found himself in the detachment of George Kantakuzin of whom might be repeated exactly what has been said of Ypsilanti On the eve of the battle of Skulyani Kantakuzin asked permission of the Russian authorities to enter our territory The detachment remained without a leader but Kirdjali Saphianos Kantagoni and others stood in no need whatever of a leader

The battle of Skulyani does not seem to have been described by anybody in all its affecting reality Imagine seven hundred men—Arnauts Albanians Greeks Bulgarians and every kind of riff raff—with no idea of military art retreating in sight of fifteen thousand Turkish cavalry This detachment hugged the bank of the Pruth and placed in front of themselves two small cannon which they had found at Jassy in the courtyard of the Governor and from which salutes used to be fired during name-day feasts The Turks would have been glad to use grape shot but they dared not without the permission of the Russian authorities the shots would infallibly have flown over to our shore The commander of our quarantine station (now deceased) although he had served forty years in the army had never in his life heard the whistle of a bullet but Heaven ordained that he should hear it then Several of them whizzed past his ears The old man became terribly angry and abused the major of the Okhotsky infantry regiment which was attached to the station The major not knowing what to do ran to the river, beyond which Turkish cavalymen were displaying their prowess, and threatened them with his finger Seeing this they turned round and galloped off, with the whole Turkish detachment after them The major, who had threatened them with his finger was called Khorchevsky I do not know what became of him

The next day, however the Turks attacked the Hetaerists Not daring to use grapeshot or cannon balls they resolved contrary to their usual custom, to employ cold steel The battle was fierce Men slashed each other with yataghans The Turks used lances, which they had not employed till then these lances were Russian Nehrassovists' fought in their ranks The Hetaerists, by permission of our Emperor were allowed to cross the Pruth and take refuge in our quarantine station They began to cross over Kantagoni and Saphianos remained upon the Turkish bank Kirdjali wounded the evening before was already within our territory Saphianos was killed Kantagoni a very stout man was wounded in the stomach by a lance With one hand he raised his sword with the other he seized the hostile lance thrust it further into himself and in that manner was able to reach his murderer with his sword when both fell together

All was over The Turks remained victorious Moldavia was swept clear of insurrectionary bands About six hundred Arnauts were scattered over Bessarabia if they did not know how to support themselves they were yet grateful to Russia for her protection They led an idle life but not a dissipated one They could always be seen in the coffee houses of half Turkish Bessarabia with long pipes in their mouths sipping coffee grounds out of small cups. Their figured jackets and red pointed slippers were already beginning to wear out but their tufted skull caps were still worn on the side of the head and yataghans and pistols still protruded from their broad sashes. Nobody complained of them. It was impossible to imagine that these poor peaceably disposed men were the notorious klephts of Moldavia the companions of the ferocious Kirdjali and that he himself was among them.

The pasha in command at Jassy became informed of this and in virtue of treaty stipulations requested the Russian authorities to extradite the brigand.

The police instituted a search. They discovered that Kirdjali was really in Kishinev. They captured him in the house of a fugitive monk in the evening when he was having supper sitting in the dark with seven companions.

Kirdjali was placed under arrest. He did not try to conceal the truth he acknowledged that he was Kirdjali.

But, he added since I crossed the Pruth I have not taken so much as a pin or imposed upon even the lowest gypsy. To the Turks to the Moldavians and to the Wallachians I am undoubtedly a brigand but to the Russians I am a guest. When Saphianos having fired off all his grape shot, came here collecting from the wounded for the last shots buttons nails watch chains and the knobs of yataghans I gave him twenty *beshliks*¹ and was left without money. God knows that I Kirdjali have been living on charity. Why then do the Russians now deliver me into the hands of my enemies?

After that Kirdjali was silent, and tranquilly awaited the decision that was to determine his fate. He did not wait long. The authorities, not being bound to look upon brigands from their romantic side, and being convinced of the justice of the demand, ordered Kirdjali to be sent to Jassy.

A man of heart and intellect, at that time a young and unknown official, who is now occupying an important post, vividly described to me his departure.

At the gate of the prison stood a caruța. Perhaps you do not know what a caruța is. It is a low wicker vehicle, to which, not very long since, there were generally harnessed six or eight sorry jades. A Moldavian with a mustache and a sheepskin cap, sitting astride one of them, incessantly shouted and cracked his whip, and his wretched animals ran on at a fairly sharp trot. If one of them began to slacken its pace, he unharassed it with terrible oaths and left it upon the road, little caring what might be its fate. On the return journey he was sure to find it in the same place, quietly grazing upon the green steppe. It not unfrequently happened that a traveler, starting from one station with eight horses, arrived at the next with a pair only. It used to be so about fifteen years ago. Nowadays in Russianized Bessarabia they have adopted Russian harness and the Russian telega.

Such a caruța stood at the gate of the prison in the year 1821, toward the end of the month of September. Jewesses who wore drooping sleeves and loose slippers, Arnauts in their ragged and picturesque attire, well proportioned Moldavian women with black-eyed children in their arms, surrounded the caruța. The men preserved silence; the women were eagerly expecting something.

The gate opened, and several police officers stepped out into the street behind them came two soldiers leading the fettered Kirdjali.

He seemed about thirty years of age. The features of his swarthy face were regular and harsh. He was tall, broad shouldered, and seemed endowed with unusual physical strength. A variegated turban covered the side of his head, and a broad sash encircled his slender waist. A dolman of thick, dark blue cloth, a shirt, its broad folds falling below the knee, and handsome slippers composed the remainder of his costume. His look was proud and calm.

One of the officials, a red faced old man in a faded uniform, on which dangled three buttons, pinched with a pair of pewter spectacles the purple knob that served him for a nose, unfolded a paper, and began to read nasally in the Moldavian tongue. From time to time he glanced haughtily at the fettered Kirdjali, to whom apparently the paper referred. Kirdjali listened to him attentively. The official finished his reading, folded up the paper, and shouted sternly at the people ordering them to make way, and the caruța to be driven up. Then Kirdjali turned to him and said a few words to him in Moldavian; his voice trembled, his countenance changed, he burst into tears, and fell at the feet of the police official, clanking his fetters. The police official, terrified, started back, the soldiers were about to raise Kirdjali, but he rose up himself, gathered up his chains, stepped into the caruța and cried, "Drive on!" A gendarme took a seat beside him, the Moldavian cracked his whip, and the caruța rolled away.

"What did Kirdjali say to you?" asked the young official of the police officer.

"He asked me," replied the police officer, smiling, "to look after his wife and child, who live not far from Kilia, in a Bulgarian village; he is afraid that they may suffer through him. Foolish fellow!"

The young official's story affected me deeply. I was sorry for poor Kirdjali. For a long time I knew nothing of his fate. Some years later I met the young official. We began to talk about the past.

What about your friend Kirdjali? I asked. Do you know what became of him?

To be sure I do, he replied, and related to me the following:

Kirdjali, having been brought to Jassy, was taken before the Pasha, who condemned him to be impaled. The execution was deferred till some holiday. In the meantime he was confined in jail.

The prisoner was guarded by seven Turks (simple people, and at heart as much brigands as Kirdjali himself); they respected him and like all Orientals listened with avidity to his strange stories.

Between the guards and the prisoner an intimate acquaintance sprang up. One day Kirdjali said to them:

Brothers! my hour is near. Nobody can escape his fate. I shall soon part from you. I should like to leave you something in remembrance of me.

The Turks pricked up their ears.

Brothers, continued Kirdjali, three years ago, when I was engaged in plundering along with the late Milchaclaki, we buried on the steppes, not far from Jassy, a kettle filled with coins. Evidently neither I nor he will make use of the hoard. Be it so, take it for yourselves and divide it in a friendly manner.

The Turks almost took leave of their senses. The question was, how were they to find the precious spot? They thought and thought and resolved that Kirdjali himself should conduct them to the place.

Night came on. The Turks removed the irons from the feet of the prisoner, tied his hands with a rope, and leaving the town, set out with him for the steppe.

Kirdjali led them walking steadily in one direction from mound to mound. They walked on for a long time. At last Kirdjali stopped near a broad stone, measured twelve paces toward the south, stamped and said: Here.

The Turks began to make their arrangements. Four of them took out their yataghans and commenced digging. Three remained on guard. Kirdjali sat down on the stone and watched them at their work.

Well, how much longer are you going to be? he asked. haven't you come to it?

Not yet, replied the Turks, and they worked away with such ardor that the perspiration rolled from them in great drops.

Kirdjali began to show signs of impatience.

What people! he exclaimed, they do not even know how to dig decently. I should have finished the whole business in a couple of minutes. Children! untie my hands and give me a yataghan.

The Turks reflected and began to take counsel together. What harm would there be? reasoned they.

Let us untie his hands and give him a yataghan. He is only one, we are seven.

And the Turks untied his hands and gave him a yataghan.

At last Kirdjali was free and armed. What must he have felt at that moment! He began digging quickly, the guards helping him. Suddenly he plunged his yataghan into one of them and leaving the blade in his breast, he snatched from his belt a couple of pistols.

The remaining six, seeing Kirdjali armed with two pistols, ran off.

Kirdjali is now operating near Jassy. Not long ago he wrote to the Governor demanding from him five thousand leus, and threatening should the money not be forthcoming to set fire to Jassy and to get at the Governor himself The five thousand were delivered to him!

Such is Kirdjah!

THE CAPTAIN'S DAUGHTER

Watch over your honor while you are young
A Proverb

A SERGEANT OF THE GUARDS

*He would have been a Captain in the Guards to-morrow
I do not care for that a common soldier let him be A splendid thing to say! He'll have much sorrow*

Who is his father then?

Knyazhnin

MY father Andrey Petrovich Grinyov had in his youth served under Count Munnich and retired with the rank of first major in the year 17— From that time onward he lived on his estate in the province of Simbirsk where he married Avdotya Vassilyevna U daughter of a poor landowner of the district There had been nine of us All my brothers and sisters died in infancy Through the kindness of Prince B our near relative, who was a major of the Guards I was registered as sergeant in the Semyonovsky regiment I was supposed to be on leave until I had completed my studies Our bringing up in those days was very different from what it is now At the age of five I was entrusted to the grocer Savelyich who was told off to look after me, as a reward for the sobriety of his behavior. Under his supervision I had learned by the age of twelve to read and write Russian and could judge very soundly the points of a borzoi dog. At that time my father hired for me a Frenchman, Monsieur Beaupre, who was fetched from Moscow together with a year's supply of wine and olive oil. Savelyich very much disliked his coming.

The child, thank heaven, has his face washed and his hair combed and his food given him—he grumbled to himself. Much good it is to spend money on the Frenchman, as though the master hadn't enough servants of his own on the estate!

In his native land Beaupre had been a hairdresser; afterward he was a soldier in Prussia and then came to Russia *pour etre outchitel*¹ without clearly understanding the meaning of that word. He was a good fellow, but extremely thoughtless and flighty. His chief weakness was his passion for the fair sex; his attentions were often rewarded by blows, which made him groan for hours. Besides, he was not an enemy of the bottle," as he put it—that is, he liked to take a drop too much. But since wine was only served in our house at dinner, and then only one glass to each person, and the tutor was generally passed over, my Beaupre soon grew accustomed to the Russian home-made brandy and in deed came to prefer it to the wines of his own country as being far better for the digestion. We made friends at once, and although he was supposed by the agreement to teach me French, German, and all subjects, he preferred to pick up some Russian from me, and after that we each followed our own pursuits. We got on together capitally. I wished for no other mentor. But fate soon parted us, and this was how it happened.

The laundress Palashka a stout pock marked girl and the dairymaid one-eyed Akulka had agreed to hrow themselves together at my mother's feet confessing their culpable weakness and tearfu"ly complaining of the mossoo who had seduced their innocence. My mother did not like to trifle with such things and complained to my father. My father was not one to lose time. He sent at once for that rascal the Frenchman. They told him mossoo was giving me my lesson. My father went to my room. At that time Beaupre was sleeping the sleep of innocence on the bed. I was usefully employed. I ought to mention that a map of the world had been ordered for me from Moscow. It hung on the wall no use was made of it and I had long felt tempted by its width and thickness. I decided to make a kite of it and taking advantage of Beaupre's slumbers set to work upon it. My father came in just at the moment when I was fixing a tail of tow to the Cape of Good Hope. Seeing my exercises in geography my father pulled me by the ear then ran up to Beaupre roused him none too gently and overwhelmed him with reproaches. Covered with confusion Beaupre tried to get up but could not the unfortunate Frenchman was dead drunk. He paid all scores at once my father lifted him off the bed by the collar kicked him out of the room and sent him away that same day to the indescribable joy of Savelitch. This was the end of my education.

I was allowed to run wild and spent my time chasing pigeons and playing leap-frog with the boys on the estate. Meanwhile I had turned sixteen. Then there came a change in my life.

One autumn day my mother was making jam with honey in the drawing room and I licked my lips as I looked at the boiling scum. My father sat by the window reading the Court Calendar which he received every year This book always had a great effect on him he never read it without agitation and the perusal of it invariably stirred his bile My mother, who knew all his ways by heart, always tried to stow the unfortunate book as far away as possible and sometimes the Court Calendar did not catch his eye for months When, however he did chance to find it he would not let it out of his hands for hours And so my father was reading the Court Calendar shrugging his shoulders from time to time and saying in an undertone

Lieutenant General! He was a sergeant in my company a Companion of two Russian Orders! And it isn't long since he and I

At last my father threw the Calendar on the sofa, and sank into a thoughtfulness which boded nothing good

He suddenly turned to my mother

Avdotyia Vassilyevna how old is Petrusha?

He is going on for seventeen my mother answered Petrusha was born the very year when Auntie Nastasya Gerasimovna lost her eye and when

Very well my father interrupted her, it is time he went into the Service He has been running about the servant girls quarters and climbing dovecots long enough

My mother was so overwhelmed at the thought of parting from me that she dropped the spoon into the saucepan and tears flowed down her cheeks My delight however could hardly be described The idea of military service was connected in my mind with thoughts of freedom and of the pleasures of Petersburg life I imagined myself as an officer of the Guards which to my mind was the height of human bliss

My father did not like to change his plans or to put them off The day for my departure was fixed On the eve of it my father said that he intended sending with me a letter to my future chief and asked for paper and a pen

Don't forget Andrey Petrovich to send my greetings to Prince B said my mother and to tell him that I hope he will be kind to Petrusha

What nonsense! my father answered with a frown why should I write to Prince B?

Why you said you were going to write to Petrusha's chief?

Well what of it?

But Petrusha's chief is Prince B to be sure Petrusha is registered in the Semjonovskiy regiment

Registered! What do I care about it? Petrusha is not going to Petersburg What would he learn if he did his service there? To be a spendthrift and a rake? No let him serve in the army and learn the routine of it and know the smell of powder and be a soldier and not a fop! Registered in the Guards! Where is his passport? Give it me

My mother found my passport which she kept put away in a chest together with my christening robe and with a trembling hand gave it to my father My father read it attentively put it before him on the table and began his letter

I was consumed by curiosity Where was I being sent if not to Petersburg? I did not take my eyes off my father's pen which moved rather slowly At last he finished sealed the letter in the same envelope with the passport took off his spectacles called me and said

Here is a letter for you to Andrey Karlovich R my old friend and comrade You are going to Orenburg to serve under him

And so all my brilliant hopes were dashed to the ground! Instead of the gay Petersburg life boredom in a distant and wild part of the country awaited me. Going into the army of which I had thought with such delight only a moment before, now seemed to me a dreadful misfortune. But it was no use protesting! Next morning a traveling-chaise drove up to the house. my bag, a box with tea things and bundles of pies and rolls: the last tokens of family affection were packed into it. My parents blessed me. My father said to me:

"Good bye, Pyotr. Carry out faithfully your oath of allegiance: obey your superiors, don't seek their favor, don't put yourself forward, and do not shirk your duty: remember the saying, Watch over your clothes while they are new, and over your honor while you are young."

My mother admonished me with tears to take care of myself, and bade Savelyich look after the child. They dressed me in a hare skin jacket and a fox fur overcoat. I stepped into the chaise with Savelyich and set off on my journey weeping bitterly.

In the evening I arrived at Simbirsk, where I was to spend the next day in order to buy the things I needed. Savelyich was entrusted with the purchase of them. I put up at an inn. Savelyich went out shopping early in the morning. Bored with looking out of the window into the dirty street, I wandered about the inn. Coming into the billiard room, I saw a tall man of about thirty-five, with a long black mustache, in a dressing gown, a billiard-cue in his hand, and a pipe in his mouth. He was playing with the marker, who drank a glass of vodka on winning, and crawled under the billiard table on all fours when he lost. I watched their game. The longer it continued, the oftener the marker had to go on all fours, till at last he remained under the table altogether. The gentleman pronounced some expressive sentences by way of a funeral oration and asked me to have a game. I refused, saying I could not play. This seemed to strike him as strange. He looked at me with something like pity nevertheless, we entered into conversation. I learned that his name was Ivan Ivanovich Zurin that he was captain of a Hussar regiment, that he had come to Simbirsk to receive recruits and was staying at the inn. Zurin invited me to share his dinner such as it was like a fellow soldier. I readily agreed. We sat down to dinner. Zurin drank a great deal and treated me, saying that I must get used to army ways. he told me military anecdotes which made me rock with laughter and we got up from table on the best of terms. Then he offered to teach me to play billiards.

It is quite essential to us soldiers, he said "On a march for instance, one comes to some wretched little place what is one to do? One can't be always beating Jews you know. So there is nothing for it but to go to the inn and play billiards and to do that one must be able to play!

He convinced me completely and I set to work very diligently. Zurin encouraged me loudly marveled at the rapid progress I was making and after several lessons suggested we should play for money at a penny a point, not for the sake of gain but simply so as not to play for nothing which he said was a most objectionable habit. I agreed to this, too, and Zurin ordered some punch and persuaded me to try it repeating that I must get used to army life what would the army be without punch? I did as he told me. We went on playing. The oftener I sipped from my glass, the more reckless I grew. My balls flew beyond the boundary every minute. I grew excited abused the marker who did not know how to count kept raising the stakes—in short behaved like a silly boy who was having his first taste of freedom. I did not notice how the time passed. Zurin looked at the clock put down his cue, and told me that I had lost a hundred rubles. I was somewha taken aback. My money was with Savelyich, I began to apologize. Zurin interrupted me.

Please do not trouble, it does not matter at all. I can wait, and meanwhile let us go and see Arinushka.

What can I say? I finished the day as recklessly as I had begun it. We had supper at Arinushka's. Zurin kept filling my glass and repeating that I ought to get used to army ways. I could hardly stand when we got up from the table. At midnight Zurin drove me back to the inn.

Savelyich met us on the steps. He cried out when he saw the unmistakable signs of my zeal for the Service.

What has come over you, sir? he said in a shaking voice. Wherever did you get yourself into such a state? Good Lord! Such a dreadful thing has never happened to you before!

Be quiet, you old dodderer! I mumbled. You must be drunk. Go and lie down, and put me to bed.

Next day I woke up with a headache, vaguely recalling the events of the day before. My reflections were interrupted by Savelyich, who came in to me with a cup of tea.

It's early you have taken to drinking, Pyotr Andreyich, he said to me, shaking his head. Much too early. And whom do you get it from? Neither your father nor your grandfather were drunkards, and your mother, it goes without saying, never tastes anything stronger than kvass. And who is at the bottom of it all? That damned Frenchman. He kept running to Antipyevna, Madame, she voo pree vodka. Here's a fine shu voo pree for you! There is no gainsaying it, he has taught you some good, the cur! And much need there was to hire an infidel for a tutor! As though master had not enough servants of his own!

I was ashamed. I turned away and said to him

Leave me Savelyich I don't want any tea But it was not easy to stop Savelyich once he began sermonizing

You see now what it is to take too much Pyotr Andreyich Your head is heavy and you have no appetite A man who drinks is no good for anything Have some cucumber brine with honey or better still half a glass of home made brandy Shall I bring you some?

At that moment a servant boy came in and gave me a note from Zurin

Dear Pyotr Andreyich

Please send me by my boy the hundred rubles you lost to me at billiards yesterday I am in urgent need of money

Always at your service

It is Zurin

There was nothing for it Assuming an air of indifference I turned to Savelyich the keeper of my money linen and affairs and told him to give the boy a hundred rubles

What! Why should I give it him?

I owe it to him I answered as coolly as possible

Owe it! repeated Savelyich growing more and more amazed but when did you have time to contract a debt sir? There's something wrong about this You may say what you like but I won't give the money

I thought that if at that decisive moment I did not get the better of the obstinate old man it would be difficult for me in the future to free myself from his tutelage and so I said looking at him haughtily

I am your master and you are my servant The money is mine I lost it at billiards because it was my pleasure to do so and I advise you not to argue but to do as you are told

Savelyich was so startled by my words that he clasped his hands ¹ and remained motionless

Well why don't you go? I cried angrily

Savelyich began to weep

My dear Pyotr Andreyich he said, in a shaking voice do not make me die of grief My darling do as I tell you, old man that I am, write to that brigand that it was all a joke and that we have no such sum A hundred rubles! Good Lord! Tell him that your parents have strictly forbidden you to play unless it be for ruts!

That will do I interrupted him sternly give me the money or I will turn you out

Savelyich looked at me with profound grief and went to fetch the money I was sorry for the poor old man but I wanted to assert my independence and to prove that I was no longer a child

The money was delivered to Zurin Savelyich hastened to get me out of the accursed inn He came to tell me that horses were ready I left Simbirsk with an uneasy conscience and silent remorse, not saying good bye to my teacher and not expecting ever to meet him again

THE GUIDE

*Thou distant land land unknown to me!
Not of my will have I come to thee
Nor was it my steed that brought me here
I've been led to thee by my recklessness
By my courage and youth and my love for drink*
An Old Song

The gesture may more properly be described as throwing up the arms and striking the hands together

EDITOR'S NOTE

MY REFLECTIONS on the journey were not particularly pleasant. The sum I had lost was considerable according to the standards of that time. I could not help confessing to myself that I had behaved stupidly at the Simbirsk inn, and I felt that I had been in the wrong with Savelyich. It all made me wretched. The old man sat gloomily on the coach box, his head turned away from me; occasionally he cleared his throat but said nothing. I was determined to make peace with him, but did not know how to begin. At last I said to him:

There, there, Savelyich, let us make it up! I am sorry. I see myself I was to blame. I got into mischief yesterday and offended you for nothing. I promise you I will be more sensible now and do as you tell me. There, don't be cross, let us make peace.

Ah, my dear Pyotr Andreyich, he answered with a deep sigh. I am cross with myself—it was all my fault. How could I have left you alone at the inn! There it is—I yielded to temptation. I thought I would call on the deacon's wife, an old friend of mine. It is just as the proverb says—you go and see your friends and in jail your visit ends. It is simply dreadful! How shall I show myself before my master and mistress? What will they say when they hear that the child gambles and drinks?

To comfort poor Savelyich I gave him my word not to dispose of a single farthing without his consent in the future. He calmed down after a time, though now and again he still muttered to himself, shaking his head. A hundred rubles! It is no joke!

I was approaching the place of my destination. A desolate plain intersected by hills and ravines stretched around. All was covered with snow. The sun was setting. The chaise was going along a narrow road or, rather a track made by peasant sledges. Suddenly the driver began looking anxiously at the horizon and at last taking off his cap, he turned to me and said

Hadn't we better turn back, sir?

What for?

The weather is uncertain the wind is rising see how it sweeps the snow

But what of it?

Do you see that?

The driver pointed with the whip to the east

I see nothing but the white steppe and a clear sky

Why that little cloud there

I certainly did see at the edge of the sky a white cloud which I had taken at first for a small hill in the distance. The driver explained to me that the cloud betokened a snowstorm

I had heard about snowstorms in those parts and knew that whole transports were sometimes buried by them. Savelyich like the driver thought that we ought to turn back. But the wind did not seem to me strong. I hoped to arrive in time at the station and told the man to drive faster

The driver set the horses at a gallop but still kept glancing eastward. The horses went well. Meanwhile the wind grew stronger and stronger every hour. The little cloud grew bigger and rose heavily gradually enveloping the sky. Fine snow began to fall and then suddenly came down in big flakes. The wind howled the snowstorm burst upon us. In a single moment the dark sky melted into the sea of snow. Everything was lost to sight

It's a bad look out sir the driver shouted. Snow storm! I peeped out of the chaise darkness and whirlwind were around us. The wind howled with such ferocious expressiveness that it seemed alive. Savelyich and I were covered with snow, the horses walked on slowly and soon stopped altogether

Why don't you go on? I asked the driver impatiently

What's the good? he answered jumping off the box I don't know where we are as it is there is no road and it is dark

I began scolding him but Savelyich took his side

Why ever didn't you take his advice? he said angrily you would have returned to the inn had some tea and slept in comfort till morning and have gone on when the storm stopped And what's the hurry? We aren't going to a wedding

Savelyich was right There was nothing to be done Snow was falling fast A great drift of it was being heaped beside the chaise The horses stood with their heads down and shuddered from time to time The driver walked round them setting the harness to rights for the sake of something to do Savelyich was grumbling I was looking around in the hope of seeing some sign of a homestead or of the road but I could distinguish nothing in the opaque whirlwind of snow Suddenly I caught sight of something black

Hey driver! I cried Look what is that black thing over there?

The driver stared into the distance

Heaven only knows sir he said climbing back on to the box it's not a wagon and not a tree and it seems to be moving It roust be a wolf or a man

I told him to go toward the unknown object which immediately began moving toward us In two minutes we came upon a man

Hey there good man the driver shouted to him do you know where the road is?

"The road is here the wayfarer answered I am standing on hard ground but what's the good?

I say my good fellow do you know these parts? I asked him Could you guide us to a night's lodging?

I know the country well enough the wayfarer answered I should think I have trodden every inch of it But you see what the weather is we should be sure to lose our way Better stop here and wait maybe the snowstorm will stop and when the sky is clear we can find our bearings by the stars

His coolness gave me courage I decided to trust to Providence and spend the night in the steppe when the wayfarer suddenly jumped on to the box and said to the driver

Thank God there's a village close by turn to the right and make straight for it

And why should I go to the right? the driver asked with annoyance where do you see the road? It's easy enough to drive other people's horses

The driver seemed to me to be right

Indeed how do you know that we are close to a village? I asked the man

Because the wind has brought a smell of smoke from over there he answered so a village must be near

His quickness and keenness of smell astonished me I told the driver to go on The horses stepped with difficulty in the deep snow The chaise moved slowly now going into a snowdrift now dipping into a ravine and swaying from side to side It was like being on a ship in a stormy sea Sivelvich groaned as he kept jolting against me I put down the front curtain wrapped my fur coat round me and dozed, lulled to sleep by the singing of the storm and the slow swaying motion of the chaise

I had a dream which I could never since forget and in which I still see a kind of prophecy when I reflect upon the strange vicissitudes of my life. The reader will forgive me probably knowing from experience how natural it is for man to indulge in superstition however great his contempt for all vain imaginings may be.

I was in that state of mind and feeling when reality gives way to dreams and merges into them in the shadowy visions of oncoming sleep. It seemed to me the storm was still raging and we were still wandering in the snowy desert. Suddenly I saw a gateway and drove into the courtyard of our estate. My first thought was fear lest my father should be angry with me for my involuntary return and regard it as an intentional disobedience. Anxious I jumped down from the chaise and saw my mother who came out to meet me on the steps with an air of profound grief.

Don't make any noise, she said. Your father is ill, he is dying and wants to say good bye to you.

Terror stricken, I followed her to the bedroom. It was dimly lighted, people with sad looking faces were standing by the bed. I approached the bed quietly, my mother lifted the bed-curtain and said, Andrey Petrovich! Petrusha has come, he returned when he heard of your illness, bless him. I knelt down and looked at the sick man. But what did I see? Instead of my father a black bearded peasant lay on the bed looking at me merrily. I turned to my mother in perplexity and said to her, What does it mean? This is not my father. And why should I ask this peasant's blessing? —

Never mind Petrusha, my mother answered, "he takes your father's place for the wedding, kiss his hand and let him bless you." I would not do it. Then the peasant jumped off the bed, seized an ax from behind his back and began waving it about. I wanted to run away and could not, the room was full of dead bodies. I stumbled against them and slipped in the pools of blood The terrible peasant called to me kindly, saying Don't be afraid, come and let me bless you. Terror and confusion possessed me At that moment I woke up. The horses were standing still. Savelych held me by the hand saying,

Come out sir, we have arrived.

Where? I asked, rubbing my eyes.

At the inn. With the Lord's help we stumbled right against the fence. Make haste, come and warm yourself, sir.

I stepped out of the chaise. The snowstorm was still raging though with less violence. It was pitch-dark. The landlord met us at the gate, holding a lantern under the skirt of his coat, and let us into a room that was small but clean enough. It was lighted by a burning splinter. A rifle and a tall Cossack cap hung on the wall.

The landlord, a Yaik Cossack, was a man of about sixty, active and well preserved. Savelych brought in the box with the tea things and asked for a fire so that he could make tea, which had never seemed to me so welcome. The landlord went to look after things.

Where is our guide? I asked Savelych.

Here, your honor, answered a voice above me.

I looked up and on the shelf by the stove saw a black beard and two glittering eyes.

You must have got chilled, brother?

I should think I did with nothing but a thin jerkin on! I did have a sheepskin coat, but I confess I pawned it yesterday in a tavern. The frost did not seem to be bad.

At that moment the landlord came in with a boiling samovar. I offered our guide a cup of tea. He climbed down from the shelf. His appearance I thought was striking. He was about forty, of medium height, lean and broad shouldered. Gray was beginning to show in his black beard his big lively eyes were never still His face had a pleasant but crafty expression His hair was cropped like a peasant's he wore a ragged jerkin and Turkish trousers I handed him a cup of tea he tasted it and made a grimace

Be so kind your honor tell them to give me a glass of vodka tea is not a Cossack drink

I readily complied with his wish The landlord took a glass and bottle out of the cupboard came up to the man and said glancing into his face

Aha! you are in our parts again! Where do you come from?

My guide winked significantly and answered in iddles

I flew about the kitchen garden picking hemp seed granny threw a pebble but missed me And how are your fellows getting on?

Nothing much to be said of them the landlord said also speaking in metaphors They tried to ring the bells for vespers but the priest's wife said they must not the priest is on a visit and the devils are in the chu ch yard

Be quiet uncle the tramp answered if it rains there will be mushrooms and if there are mushrooms there will be a basket for them and now (he winked again) put the av behind your back the forester is about Your honor here's a health to you!

With these words he took the glass crossed himself and drank it at one gulp then he bowed to me and returned to the shelf by the stove

I could not at the time understand anything of this thieves jargon but later on I guessed they were talking of the affairs of the Yaik Cossacks who had just been subdued after their rebellion in 1772 Savelyich listened with an air of thorough disapproval He looked suspiciously both at the landlord and at our guide The inn stood in the steppe by itself, far from any village, and looked uncommonly like a robbers den. But there was nothing else for it. There could be no question of continuing the journey. Savelyich's anxiety amused me greatly. Meanwhile I made ready for the night and lay down on the bench. Savelyich decided to sleep on the stove, the landlord lay down on the floor. Soon the room was full of snoring and I dropped fast asleep.

Waking up rather late in the morning, I saw that the storm had subsided. The sun was shining. The boundless steppe was wrapped in a covering of dazzling snow. The horses were harnessed. I paid the landlord who charged us so little that even Savelyich did not dispute about it or try to beat him down as was his wont. He completely forgot his suspicions of the evening before. I called our guide, thanked him for the help he had given us, and told Savelyich to give him half a ruble for vodka. Savelyich frowned.

Half a ruble! he said. What for? Because you were pleased to give him a lift and bring him to the inn? You may say what you like, sir, we have no half rubles to spare. If we give tips to every one we shall soon have to starve.

I could not argue with Savelyich. I had promised that the money was to be wholly in his charge. I was annoyed, however, at not being able to thank the man who had saved me from a very unpleasant situation if not from actual danger.

Very well, I said calmly. If you don't want to give him half a ruble, give him something out of my clothes. He is dressed much too lightly. Give him my hareskin coat.

Mercy on us, Pyotr Andreyich! Savelyich cried. What is the good of your hareskin coat to him? He will sell it for drink at the next poor house, the dog.

That's no concern of yours, old fellow, whether I sell it for drink or not said the tramp His honor gives me a fur coat of his own it is your master's pleasure to do so and your business as a servant is to obey and not to argue

"You have no fear of God you brigand! Savelyich answered in an angry voice You see the child has no sense as yet and you are only too glad to take advantage of his good nature What do you want with a gentleman's coat? You can't squeeze your hulking great shoulders into it however you try!

Please don't argue I said to the old man bring the coat at once

Good Lord! my Savelyich groaned Why the coat is almost new! To give it away and not to a decent man either but to a shameless drunkard!

Nevertheless the hareskin coat appeared The peasant immediately tried it on The coat that I had slightly outgrown was certainly a little tight for him He succeeded however in getting into it bursting the seams as he did so Savelyich almost howled when he heard the threads breaking The tramp was extremely pleased with my present He saw me to the chaise and said with a low bow

Thank you your honor! May God reward you for your goodness I shall not forget your kindness so long as I live

He went his way and I drove on taking no notice of Savelyich and soon forgot the snowstorm of the day before my guide and the hareskin coat

Arriving in Orenburg I went straight to the General I saw a tall man already bent by age His long hair was perfectly white An old and faded uniform reminded one of the soldiers of Empress Anna's time he spoke with a strong German accent I gave him my father's letter When I mentioned my name he threw a quick glance at me

Du lieber Gott! he said It does not seem long since Andrey Petrovich wa your age and now see what a big son he has! Oh how time flies!

He opened the letter and began reading it in an undertone interposing his own remarks My dear Sir Andrey Karlovich I hope that Your Excellency

Why so formal? Fie he should be ashamed of himself Discipline is of course a thing of the first importance but is this the way to write to an old Kamerad? Your Excellency has not forgotten

Hm and when the late Field Marshal Munnich the march and also Carolinchen Ehe Bruder! so he still remembers our old escapades! Now to business I am sending my young rascal to you Hm hold him in hedgehog gloves What are hedgehog gloves! It must be a Russian saying What does it mean? he asked me

That means I answered looking as innocent as possible to treat one kindly not to be too stern to give one plenty of freedom

Hm I see and do not give him too much rope No evidently hedgehog gloves means some thing different Herewith his passport Where is it? Ah here Write to the Semyonov sky regiment Very good very good it shall be done Allow me forgetting your rank to embrace you like an old friend and comrade Ah at last he thought of it and so on and so on

Well my dear he said, having finished the letter and put my passport aside it shall all be done as your father wishes you will be transferred with the rank of an officer to the N regiment and not to lose time you shall go tomorrow to the Belogorsky fortress to serve under Captain Mironov good and honorable man You will see real service there and learn discipline.

There is nothing for you to do at Orenburg dissipation is bad for a young man And tonight I shall be pleased to have you dine with me

I am going from bad to worse! I thought What is the good of my having been a sergeant in the Guards almost before I was born! Where has it brought me? To the N regiment and a desolate fortress on the border of the Kirghiz Steppes!

I had dinner with Andrey Karlovich and his old aide-de-camp Strict German economy reigned at his table and I think the fear of seeing occasionally an additional guest at his bachelor meal had something to do with my hasty removal to the garrison The following day I took leave of the General and set off for my destination

THE FORTRESS

*In this fortress fine we live
Bread and water is our fare
And when ferocious foes
Come to our table bare
To a real feast we treat them
Load the cannon and then beat them*

Soldiers Song

Old fashioned people sir

Fonvizin

THE Belogorsky fortress was twenty five miles from Orenburg The road ran along the steep bank of the Yaik The river was not yet frozen and its leaden waves looked dark and mournful between the monotonous banks covered with white snow Beyond it the Kirghiz Steppes stretched into the distance I was absorbed in reflections for the most part of a melancholy nature. Life in the fortress did not attract me. I tried to picture Captain Mironov, my future chief, and thought of him as a stern, bad tempered old man who cared for nothing but discipline and was ready to put me under arrest on a diet of bread and water for the least little trifle. Meanwhile it was growing dark. We were driving rather fast.

Is it far to the fortress? I asked the driver.

No, not far, he answered. It's over there, you can see it.

I looked from side to side, expecting to see menacing battlements, towers, and a rampart, but saw nothing except a village surrounded by a log fence. On one side of it stood three or four haystacks, half-covered with snow; on another a tumbledown windmill with wings of bark that hung idle.

But where is the fortress? I asked in surprise.

Why here, answered the driver, pointing to the village, and as he spoke we drove into it.

At the gate I saw an old cannon made of cast iron. The streets were narrow and crooked, the cottages low and, for the most part, with thatched roofs. I told the driver to take me to the Commandant's, and in another minute the chaise stopped before a wooden house built upon rising ground close to a church, also made of wood.

No one came out to meet me. I walked into the entry and opened the door into the ante-room. An old soldier was sitting on the table, sewing a blue patch on the sleeve of a green uniform. I asked him to announce me.

Go in, my dear, he said. Our people are at home.

I stepped into a clean little room, furnished in the old-fashioned style. In the corner stood a cupboard full of crockery, an officer's diploma in a frame under glass hung on the wall, colored prints representing

"The Taking of Ochakoff and Küstrin The Choosing of a Bride and The Cat's Funeral made bright patches on each side of it An elderly lady dressed in a Russian jacket¹ and with a kerchief on her head was sitting by the window She was winding yarn which a one-eyed man in an officer's uniform held for her on his outstretched hands

"What is your pleasure sir?" she asked me, going on with her work

I answered that I had come to serve in the army and thought it my duty to present myself to the Captain and with these words I turned to the one-eyed old man whom I took to be the Commandant but the lady of the house interrupted the speech I had prepared

Ivan Kuzmich is not at home she answered he has gone to see Father Gerasim but it makes no difference sir I am his wife You are very welcome Please sit down

She called the maid and asked her to call the sergeant The old man kept looking at me inquisitively with his single eye

May I be so bold as to ask in what regiment you have been serving?

I satisfied his curiosity

And may I ask he continued why you have been transferred from the Guards to the garrison?

I answered that such was the decision of my superiors

"I presume it was for behavior unseemly in an officer of the Guards?" the persistent old man went on

That's enough nonsense, the Captain's lady interrupted him You see the young man is tired after the journey he has other things to think of Hold your hands straight

¹ T logreyka a padded or fur-lined jacket, with or without sleeves.

And don't you worry, my dear, that you have been banished to these wilds, she went on, addressing her self to me. You are not the first nor the last. You will like it better when you are used to it. Shvabrin Alexey Ivanych was transferred to us five years ago for killing a man. Heaven only knows what possessed him but would you believe it, he went out of town with a certain lieutenant and they both took swords and started prodding each other—and Alexey Ivanych did for the lieutenant and before two witnesses too! There it is—one never knows what one may do.

At that moment the sergeant, a young and well built Cossack, came into the room.

Maximych! the Captain's lady said to him. Find a lodging for this gentleman and mind it is clean.

Yes Vasilisa Yegorovna, the Cossack answered. Shall I get rooms for his honor at Ivan Polezhayev's?

Certainly not Maximych said the lady. Polezhayev is crowded as it is besides he is a friend and always remembers that we are his superiors. Take the gentleman what is your name sir?

Pyotr Andreyich

Take Pyotr Andreyich to Semyon Kuzov's. He let his horse into my kitchen garden the rascal. Well Maximych is everything in order?

All is well thank God the Cossack answered only Corporal Prokhorov had a fight in the bath house with Ustinya Negulina about a bucket of hot water.

Ivan Ignatyich! said the Captain's lady to the one eyed old man. Will you look into it and find out whether Ustinya or Prokhorov is to blame? And punish them both! Well Maximych you can go now. Pyotr Andreyich Maximych will take you to your lodging.

I took leave of her. The Cossack brought me to a cottage that stood on the high bank of the river at the very edge of the fortress. Half of the cottage was occupied by Semyon Kuzov's family; the other was allotted to me. It consisted of one fairly clean room partitioned into two. Savelyich began unpacking. I looked out of the narrow window. The melancholy steppe stretched before me. On one side I could see a few cottages; several hens strutted about the street. An old woman stood on the steps with a trough, calling to pigs that answered her with friendly grunting. And this was the place where I was doomed to spend my youth! I suddenly felt wretched. I left the window and went to bed without any upper in spite of Savelyich's entreaties. He kept repeating in distress

Merciful heavens! he won't eat! What will my mistress say if the child is taken ill?

Next morning I had just begun to dress when the door opened and a young officer, short, swarthy, with a plain but extremely lively face, walked in.

Excuse me, he said to me in French, for coming without ceremony to make your acquaintance. Yesterday I heard of your arrival. I could not resist the desire to see at last a human face. You will understand this when you have lived here for a time.

I guessed that this was the officer who had been dismissed from the Guards on account of a duel. We made friends at once. Shvabrin was very intelligent. His conversation was witty and entertaining. He described to me in a most amusing way the Commandant's family, their friends, and the place to which fate had brought him. I was screaming with laughter when the old soldier, whom I had seen mending a uniform at the Commandant's, came in and gave me Vasilisa Yegorovna's invitation to dine with them. Shvabrin said he would go with me.

As we approached the Commandant's house we saw in the square some twenty old garrison soldiers in three cornered hats and with long queues. They were standing at attention. The Commandant a tall vigorous old man wearing a night-cap and a cotton dressing gown, stood facing them. When he saw us he came up said a few kind words to me, and went on drilling his men. We stopped to look on but he asked us to go to his house promising to come soon after.

There's nothing here worth looking at he added. Vasilisa Yegorovna gave us a kind and homely welcome, treating me as though she had known me all my life. The old veteran and the maid Palasha were laying the table.

My Ivan Kuzmich is late with his drilling today," she said. Palasha call your master to dinner. And where is Masha?

At that moment a girl of eighteen, with a rosy round face came in. her fair hair was smoothly combed behind her ears which at that moment were burning. I did not particularly like her at the first glance. I was prejudiced against her. Shvabrin had described Masha, the Captain's daughter as quite stupid. Marya Ivanovna sat down in a corner and began sewing. Meanwhile cabbage soup was served. Not seeing her husband Vasilisa Yegorovna sent Palasha a second time to call him.

Tell your master that our guests are waiting and the soup will get cold. there is always time for drilling thank heaven. he can shout to his heart's content later on.

The Captain soon appeared accompanied by the one-eyed old man.

What has come over you my dear? his wife said to him. Dinner was served ages ago and you wouldn't come.

But I was busy drilling soldiers. Vasilisa Yegorovna let me tell you.

Come, come, his wife retorted all this drilling is mere pretence—your soldiers don't learn anything and you are no good at it either. You had much better sit at home and say your prayers. Dear guests, come to the table.

We sat down to dinner. Vasilisa Yegorovna was never silent for a minute and bombarded me with questions: who were my parents, were they living, where did they live, how big was their estate. When she heard that my father had three hundred serfs she said: Just fancy! to think of there being rich people in the world! And we my dear have only one maid Palasha, but we are comfortable enough, thank heaven. The only trouble is Masha ought to be getting married and all she has by way of dowry is a comb and a broom and a brass farthing, just enough to go to the bath with. If the right man turns up, all well and good; but if not, she will die an old maid.

I glanced at Marya Ivanovna: she flushed crimson and tears dropped into her plate. I felt sorry for her and hastened to change the conversation.

I have heard, I said rather inappropriately, that the Bashkirs propose to attack your fortress.

From whom have you heard it, my good sir? Ivan Kuzmich asked.

I was told it at Orenburg, I answered.

Don't you believe it! said the Commandant: we have not heard anything of it for years. The Bashkirs have been scared and the Kirghiz too have had their lesson. No fear, they won't attack us, and if they do I will give them such a fright that they will keep quiet for another ten years.

And you are not afraid, I continued, turning to Vasilisa Yegorovna, to remain in a fortress subject to such dangers?

It's a habit, my dear, she answered. "Twenty years ago when we were transferred here from the regiment

I cannot tell you how I dreaded those accursed infidels! As soon as I saw their lynx caps and heard their squealing my heart stood still would you believe it! And now I have grown so used to it that I don't stir when they tell us the villains are prowling round the fortress.

Vasilisa Yegorovna is a most courageous lady Shvabrin remarked pompously Ivan Kuzmich can bear witness to it.

Yes she is not of the timid sort, let me tell you! Ivan Kuzmich assented.

And Marya Ivanovna? Is she as brave as you are? I asked.

Is Masha brave? her mother answered No Masha is a coward She can't bear even now to hear a rifle shot it makes her all of a tremble And when two years ago Ivan Kuzmich took it into his head to fire our cannon on my name day she nearly died of fright, poor dear Since then we haven't fired the cursed cannon any more.

We got up from the table The Captain and his wife went to lie down, and I went to Shvabrin's and spent the whole evening with him.

THE DUEL

*Oh very well take up then your position
And you shall see me pierce your body through* Knyazhinin

SEVERAL weeks had passed and my life in the Belogorsky fortress had grown not merely endurable but positively pleasant I was received in the Command ant's house as one of the family. The husband and wife were most worthy people. Ivan Kuzmich, who had risen from the ranks to be an officer, was a plain and uneducated man, but most kind and honorable. His wife ruled him, which suited his easy-going disposition. Vasilisa Yegorovna looked upon her husband's military duties as her own concern and managed the fortress as she did her own home. Marya Ivanovna soon lost her shyness with me and we became friends. I found her to be a girl of feeling and good sense. Imperceptibly I grew attached to the kind family and even to Ivan Ignatyich, the one-eyed lieutenant of the garrison. Shvabrin had said of him that he was on improper terms with Vasilisa Yegorovna, though there was not a semblance of truth in it, but Shvabrin did not care about that.

I received my commission. My military duties were not strenuous. In our blessed fortress there were no parades, no drills, no sentry duty. Occasionally the Commandant, of his own accord, taught the soldiers, but had not yet succeeded in teaching all of them to know their left hand from their right. Shvabrin had several French books. I began reading and developed a taste for literature. In the mornings I read, practised translating, and sometimes composed verses. I almost always dined at the Commandant's and spent there the rest of the day; in the evenings, Father Gerasim and his wife, Akulina Pamiłovna, the biggest gossip in the neighborhood, sometimes came there also. Of course I saw Alexey Ivanyich Shvabrin every day, but his conversation grew more and more distasteful to me as time went on. I disliked his constant jokes about the Commandant's family and, in particular, his derisive remarks about Marya Ivanovna. There was no other society in the fortress, and indeed I wished for no other.

In spite of the prophecies the Bashkirs did not rise Peace reigned around our fortress But the peace was suddenly disturbed by an internal war

I have already said that I tried my hand at literature Judged by the standards of that period my attempts were quite creditable and several years later Alexander Petrovich Sumarokov¹ thoroughly approved of them
 One day I succeeded in writing a song that pleased me Everybody knows that sometimes under the pretext of seeking advice writers try to find an appreciative listener And so having copied out my song I took it to Shvabrin who was the only person in the fortress capable of doing justice to the poet's work After a few preliminary remarks I took my note book out of my pocket and read the following verses to him

*Thoughts of love I try to banish
 And her beauty to forget
 And ah me! avoiding Masha Hope I shall my freedom get*

*But the eyes that have seduced me
 Are before me night and day
 To confusion they've reduced me
 Driven rest and peace away*

*When you hear of my misfortunes
 Pity Masha pity me!
 You can see my cruel torments
 I am captive held by thee*

What do you think of it? I asked Shvabrin expecting praise as my rightful due But to my extreme annoyance Shvabrin who was usually a kind critic declared that my song was bad

Sumarokov (1718-77) an early Russian poet of the pseudo-classical school

Why so? I asked concealing my vexation

Because such lines are worthy of my teacher Vasily Kirilych Tretyakovsky¹ and greatly remind me of his love verses

He then took my note book from me and began mercilessly criticizing every line and every word of the poem mocking me in a most derisive manner I could not endure it snatched the note book from him and said I would never show him my verses again Shvabrin laughed at this threat too

We shall see, he said whether you will keep your word Poets need a listener as much as Ivan Kuzmich needs his decanter of vodka before dinner And who is this Masha to whom you declare your tender passion and lovesickness? Is it Marya Ivanovna by any chance?

It's none of your business whoever she may be I answered frowning I want neither your opinion nor your conjectures

Oh! A touchy poet and a modest lover! Shvabrin went on irritating me more and more But take a friend's advice if you want to succeed you must have recourse to something better than songs

What do you mean sir? Please explain yourself

Willingly I mean that if you want Masha Mironov to visit you at dusk present her with a pair of earrings instead of tender verses

My blood boiled

And why have you such an opinion of her? I asked hardly able to restrain my indignation

Because I know her manners and morals from experience he answered with a fiendish smile

It's a lie you scoundrel I cried furiously It's a shameless lie!

Shvabrin changed color

¹ One of the early Russian writers of poetry remarkable for his unwearied genial and tireless lack of talent. TRANSLATED BY

You'll have to pay for this he said gripping my arm you will give me satisfaction

Certainly—whenever you like, I answered, with relief I was ready to tear him to pieces at that moment

I went at once to Ivan Ignatyich whom I found with a needle in his hands threading mushrooms to dry for the winter, at Vasilisa Yegorovna's request

Ah Pyotr Andreyich! Pleased to see you! he said, when he saw me What good fortune brings you? What business, may I ask?

I explained to him briefly that I had quarreled with Alexey Ivanych and was asking him, Ivan Ignatyich to be my second Ivan Ignatyich listened to me attentively staring at me with his solitary eye

You are pleased to say he answered that you intend to kill Alexey Ivanych and wish me to witness it? Is that so may I ask?

Quite so

Good heavens Pyotr Andreyich! What are you thinking about? You have quarreled with Alexey Ivanych? What ever does it matter? Bad words are of no consequence He abuses you—you swear back at him he hits you in the face—you hit him on the ear, twice three times—and then go your own way and we shall see to it that you make it up later on But killing a fellow-creature—is that a right thing to do let me ask you? And anyway if you killed him it wouldn't matter so much I am not very fond of Alexey Ivanych myself for the matter of that But what if he makes a hole in you? What will that be like? Who will be made a fool of then may I ask?

The sensible old man's arguments did not shake me I stuck to my intention

As you like said Ivan Ignatyich Do what you think best But why should I be your witness? What for? Two men fighting each other! What is there worth seeing in it may I ask? I've been in the Swedish War and the Turkish and believe me I've seen enough

I tried to explain to him the duties of a second but Ivan Ignatyich simply could not understand me

You may say what you like he said but if I am to take part in this affair it is only to go to Ivan Kuzmich and tell him as duty bids me that a crime contrary to the interests of the State is being planned in the fortress--and to ask if the Commandant would be pleased to take proper measures

I was alarmed and begged Ivan Ignatyich to say nothing to the Commandant I had difficulty in persuading him but at last he gave me his word and I left him

I spent the evening as usual at the Commandant's I tried to appear cheerful and indifferent so as to escape inquisitive questions and not give grounds for suspicion but I confess I could not boast of the indifference which people in my position generally profess to feel That evening I was inclined to be tender and emotional Marya Ivanovna attracted me more than ever The thought that I might be seeing her for the last time made her seem particularly touching to me Shvabrin was there also I took him aside and told him of my conversation with Ivan Ignatyich

What do we want with seconds? he said to me dryly we will do without them

We arranged to fight behind the corn stacks near the fortress and to meet there the following morning between six and seven We appeared to be talking so amiably that Ivan Ignatyich delighted let out the secret

That's right! he said to me looking pleased a bad peace is better than a good quarrel a damaged name is better than a damaged skin

What's this what's this Ivan Ignatyich? asked

Vasilisa Yegorovna, who was telling fortunes by cards in the corner I wasn't listening

Ivan Ignatyich seeing my look of annoyance and recalling his promise was confused and did not know what to say Shvabrin hastened to his assistance

Ivan Ignatyich approves of our making peace" he said

But with whom had you quarreled my dear?

I had rather a serious quarrel with Pyotr Andreyich

What about?

About the merest trifle Vasilisa Yegorovna a song

That's a queer thing to quarrel about! A song! But how did it happen?

Why this is how it was Not long ago Pyotr Andreyich composed a song and today he began singing it in my presence, and I struck up my favorite

Captain's daughter I warn you Don't you go for midnight walks

There was discord Pyotr Andreyich was angry at first but then he thought better of it and decided that every one may sing what he likes And that was the end of it

Shvabrin's impudence very nearly incensed me, but no one except me understood his coarse hints or at any rate no one took any notice of them From songs the conversation turned to poets the Commandant remarked that they were a bad lot and bitter drunkards and advised me as a friend to give up writing verses for such an occupation did not accord with military duties and brought one to no good

Shvabrin's presence was unendurable to me I soon said good bye to the Captain and his family when I came home I examined my sword felt the point of it and went to bed telling Savelyich to wake me at six o'clock.

The following morning I stood behind the corn stacks at the appointed hour waiting for my opponent. He arrived soon after me.

We may be disturbed, he said. We had better be quick.

We took off our uniforms and dressed in our waist coats only, bared our swords. At that moment Ivan Ignatyich with five soldiers of the garrison suddenly appeared from behind the stacks. He requested us to go to the Commandant's. We obeyed, vexed as we were, the soldiers surrounded us and we followed Ivan Ignatyich, who led us in triumph, stepping along with an air of extraordinary importance.

We entered the Commandant's house. Ivan Ignatyich opened the doors and solemnly proclaimed: I have brought them!

We were met by Vasilisa Yegorovna.

"Goodness me! What ever next? What? How could you? Planning murder in our fortress! Ivan Kuzmich put them under arrest at once! Pyotr Andreyich! Alex-y Ivanych! Give me your swords, give them up, give them up! Palasha, take these swords to the pantry! I did not expect this of you, Pyotr Andreyich, aren't you ashamed of yourself? It is all very well for Alexey Ivanych—he has been dismissed from the Guards for killing a man, and he does not believe in God, but fancy you doing a thing like this! Do you want to be like him?"

Ivan Kuzmich fully agreed with his wife and kept repeating:

Vasilisa Yegorovna is quite right, let me tell you, duel are explicitly forbidden in the army regulations.

Meanwhile Palasha took our swords and carried them to the pantry I could not help laughing Shvabrin retained his dignity

With all respect for you, he said coolly I must observe that you give yourself unnecessary trouble in passing judgment upon us Leave it to Ivan Kuzmich—it is his business

But my dear sir aren't husband and wife one flesh and one spirit? the Commandant's lady retorted

Ivan Kuzmich what are you thinking of? Put them under arrest at once in different corners and give them nothing but bread and water till they come to their senses! And let Father Gerasim set them a penance that they may beg God to forgive them and confess their sin to the people

Ivan Kuzmich did not know what to do Marya Ivanovna was extremely pale Little by little the storm subsided Vasilisa Yegorovna calmed down and made us kiss each other Palasha brought us back our swords We left the Commandant's house apparently reconciled Ivan Ignatyich accompanied us

Aren't you ashamed I said to him angrily to have betrayed us to the Commandant when you promised me not to?

God is my witness I never said anything to Ivan Kuzmich he answered Vasilisa Yegorovna wormed it all out of me And he made all the arrangements without saying a word to Ivan Kuzmich But thank Heaven that it has all ended in this way

With these words he turned home and Shvabrin and I were left alone

We cannot let it end at that I said to him

Of course not Shvabrin answered you will answer me with your blood for your insolence but I expect we shall be watched We shall have to pretend to be friends for a few days Good bye

And we parted as though nothing had happened. Returning to the Commandant's I sat down as usual. By Marya Ivanovna Ivan Kuzmich was not at home. Vasilisa Yegorovna was busy with household matters. We spoke in undertones. Marya Ivanovna tenderly reproached me for the anxiety I had caused everyone by my quarrel with Shvabrin.

I was quite overcome, she said, when I heard you were going to fight. How strange men are! Because of a single word which they would be sure to forget in a week's time they are ready to kill each other and to sacrifice their lives and their conscience and the welfare of those who . . . But I am sure you did not begin the quarrel. Alexey Ivanych is probably to blame.

And why do you think so, Marya Ivanovna?

Oh, I don't know. . . he always jeers at people. I don't like Alexey Ivanych. He repels me and yet strange to say I would not on any account hate him. I dislike me also. That would worry me dreadfully.

And what do you think, Marya Ivanovna? Does he like you?

Marya Ivanovna stammered and blushed.

I think . . . she said, I believe he does like me.

And why do you believe it?

Because he made me an offer of marriage.

He made you an offer of marriage? When?

Last year. Some two months before you came.

And you refused?

As you see. Of course, Alexey Ivanych is clever and rich and of good family, but when I think that in church I should have to kiss him before all the people . . . not for anything! Nothing would induce me!

Marya Ivanovna's words opened my eyes and explained a great deal to me. I understood the persistent slanders with which he pursued her. The words that gave rise to our quarrel seemed to me all the more vile.

when instead of coarse and unseemly mockery, I saw in them deliberate calumny. My desire to punish the impudent slanderer grew more intense and I waited impatiently for an opportunity.

I did not have to wait long. The following day as I sat composing an elegy biting my pen as I searched for a rhyme Shvabrin knocked at my window. I left my pen, picked up my sword and went out to him.

Why wait? Shvabrin said. We are not watched. Let us go down to the river. No one will disturb us there.

We walked in silence. Descending by a steep path we stopped at a river-bank and bared our swords. Shvabrin was more skilled than I but I was stronger and more daring. Monsieur Beaupre, who had once been a soldier, had given me a few lessons in fencing and I made use of them. Shvabrin had not expected to find in me so formidable an opponent. For a time we could neither of us do the other any harm, at last observing that Shvabrin was weakening I began to press him and almost drove him into the river. Suddenly I heard someone loudly calling my name. I turned round and saw Savelyich running toward me down the steep path. At that moment I felt a stab in my breast under the right shoulder, and fell down senseless.

LOVE

*Ah you young maiden you maiden fair!
 You must not marry while still so young
 You must ask your father and mother first
 Your father and mother and all your kin
 You must grow in wisdom and keen good sense
 Must save up for yourself a rich dowry*

A Folk Song

*If you find one better than me—you'll forget me
 If one who is worse—you'll remember*

A Folk Song

WHEN I regained consciousness I could not grasp for a few minutes where I was and what had happened to me. I was lying on a bed in a strange room feeling very weak. Savelyich was standing before me with a candle in his hand. Someone was carefully unwrapping the bandages round my chest and shoulder. Gradually my thoughts cleared. I remembered my duel and understood that I had been wounded. At that moment the door creaked.

How is he? whispered a voice which sent a tremor through me.

Still the same. Savelyich answered with a sigh. Still unconscious. It's the fifth day.

I tried to turn my head but could not.

Where am I? Who is here? I said with an effort. Marya Ivanovna came up to my bed and bent over me.

Well, how do you feel? she asked.

God be thanked. I answered in a weak voice. "Is it you, Marya Ivanovna? Tell me."

I had not the strength to go on and broke off Savelyich cried out His face lit up with joy

He has come to his senses! Thank God! Well my dear Pyotr Andreyich you have given me a fright! Five days it's no joke!

Marya Ivanovna interrupted him

Don't talk to him too much, Savelyich she said he is still weak She went out and quietly closed the door

My thoughts were in a turmoil And so I was in the Commandant's house Marya Ivanovna had come in to me I wanted to ask Savelyich several questions but the old man shook his head and stopped his ears I closed my eyes in vexation and soon dropped asleep

When I woke up I called Savelyich but instead of him I saw Marya Ivanovna before me her angelic voice greeted me I cannot express the blissful feeling that possessed me at that moment I seized her hand and covered it with kisses wetting it with tears of tenderness Masha did not withdraw her hand and suddenly her lips touched my cheek and I felt their fresh and ardent kiss A flame ran through me

Dear kind Marya Ivanovna I said to her, be my wife, consent to make me happy

She regained her self possession

Calm yourself for Heaven's sake she said taking her hand from me you are not out of danger yet—the wound may open Take care of yourself if only for my sake

With these words she went out leaving me in an ecstasy of delight Happiness revived me She would be mine! She loved me! My whole being was filled with this thought

From that time onward I grew better every hour I was treated by the regimental barber for there was no other doctor in the fortress and fortunately he did not attempt to be clever Youth and nature hastened my recovery The whole of the Commandant's family looked after me Marya Ivanovna never left my side Of course at the first opportunity I returned to our interrupted explanation and Marya Ivanovna heard me out with more patience Without any affectation she confessed her love for me and said that her parents would certainly be glad of her happiness

But think well she added won't your parents raise objections?

I pondered I had no doubts of my mother's kindness but knowing my father's views and disposition I felt that my love would not particularly touch him and that he would look upon it as a young man's whim I candidly admitted this to Marya Ivanovna but decided to write to my father as eloquently as possible asking him to give us his blessing I showed my letter to Marya Ivanovna who found it so touching and convincing that she never doubted of its success and abandoned herself to the feelings of her tender heart with all the trustfulness of youth and love

I made peace with Shvabrin in the first days of my convalescence In reprimanding me for the duel Ivan Kuzmich had said to me

Ah Pyotr Andreyich I ought really to put you under arrest but you have been punished enough already Alexey Ivanych though is shut up in the store house and Vasilisa Yegorovna has his sword under lock and key It is just as well he should think things over and repent

I was much too happy to retain any hostile feeling in my heart I interceded for Shvabrin and the kind Commandant with his wife's consent decided to release him Shvabrin called on me he expressed a profound regret for what had passed between us he admitted that he had been entirely to blame and asked me to forget the past. It was not in my nature to harbor malice and I sincerely forgave him both our quarrel and the wound he had inflicted on me. I ascribed his slander to the vexation of wounded vanity and rejected love and generously excused my unhappy rival.

I was soon quite well again and able to move into my lodgings. I awaited with impatience the answer to my last letter, not daring to hope and trying to stifle melancholy forebodings. I had not yet declared my intentions to Vasilisa Yegorovna and her husband, but my offer was not likely to surprise them. Neither Marya Ivanovna nor I attempted to conceal our feelings from them and we were certain of their consent beforehand.

At last one morning Savelyich came in to me holding a letter. I seized it with a tremor. The address was written in my father's hand. This prepared me for something important for as a rule it was my mother who wrote to me and my father only added a few lines at the end of the letter. Several minutes passed before I unsealed the envelope, reading over again and again the solemnly worded address: To my son Pyotr Andreivich Grinyov, at the Belogorsky fortress in the Province of Orenburg. I tried to guess from the handwriting in what mood my father wrote the letter. At last I brought myself to open it and saw from the very first lines that all was lost. The letter was as follows:

My Son Pyotr!

On the 15th of this month we received the letter in which you ask for our parental blessing and consent to your marriage with Marya Ivanovna Mironov's daughter. I do not intend to give you either my blessing or my consent and indeed I mean to get at you and give you a thorough lesson as to a naughty boy for your pranks, not regarding your officer's rank for you have proved that you are not yet worthy to wear the sword which has been given to you to defend your fatherland and not to fight duels with scapegraces like yourself I will write at once to Andrey Karlovich asking him to transfer you from the Belogorsky fortress to some remote place where you can get over your foolishness When your mother heard of your duel and of your being wounded she was taken ill with grief and is now in bed What will become of you? I pray to God that you may be reformed although I dare not hope for this great mercy

Your father

A G

The perusal of this letter stirred various feelings in me The cruel expressions which my father did not stint wounded me deeply The contemptuous way in which he referred to Marya Ivanovna appeared to me as unseemly as it was unjust The thought of my being transferred from the Belogorsky fortress terrified me but most of all I was grieved by the news of my mother's illness I felt indignant with Savelyich never doubting it was he who had informed my parents of the duel As I paced up and down my tiny room I stopped before him and said looking at him angrily

So it's not enough for you that I have been wounded because of you and lain for a whole month at death's door—you want to kill my mother as well

Savelyich was thunderstruck

Good heavens sir what are you saying? he said almost sobbing You have been wounded because of me! God knows I was running to shield you with my own breast from Alexey Ivanych's sword! It was old age curse it that hindered me But what have I done to your mother?

What have you done? I repeated ' Who asked you to inform against me? Are you here to spy on me?'

I informed against you? Savelyich answered with tears O Lord, King of Heaven! V-ry well read then what ma ter writes to me you will see how I informed against you

He pulled a letter out of his pocket and I read the follow ng

You should be ashamed you old dog not to have written to me about my son Pyotr Andreyevich in spite of my strict orders strangers have to inform me of his misdoings So this is how you carry out your duties and your master's will? I will send you to look after pigs you old dog for concealing the truth and conniving with the young man As soon as you receive this I command you to write to me at once about his health which I am told is better in what place exactly he was wounded and whether his wound has healed properly

It was obvious that Savelyich was innocent and I had insulted him for nothing by my reproaches and suspicion I begged his pardon but the old man was inconsolable

This is what I have come to, he kept repeating this is the favor my masters show me for my services! I am an old dog and a swineherd and I am the cause of your wound! No my dear Pyotr Andreyevich not I but the damned Frenchman is at the bottom of it he taught you to prod people with iron spits and to stamp with your feet as though prodding and stamping could save one from an evil man! Much need there was to hire the Frenchman and spend money for nothing!"

But who then had taken the trouble to inform my father of my conduct? The General? But he did not seem to show much interest in me and Ivan Kuzmich did not think it necessary to report my duel to him. I was lost in conjectures. My suspicions fixed upon Shva brin. He alone could benefit by informing against me and thus causing me perhaps to be removed from the fortress and parted from the Commandant's family. I went to tell it all to Marya Ivanovna. She met me on the steps.

What is the matter with you? she said when she saw me. How pale you are!

All is lost. I answered and gave her my father's letter.

She turned pale too. After reading the letter she returned it to me with a hand that shook and said in a trembling voice:

It seems it is not to be. Your parents do not want me in your family. God's will be done! God knows better than we do what is good for us. There is nothing for it. Pyotr Andreyich may you at least be happy.

This shall not be. I cried, seizing her hand. You love me. I am ready to face any risk. Let us go and throw ourselves at your parents' feet. They are simple-hearted people, not hard and proud. They will bless us. We will be married. And then in time I am sure we will soften my father's heart. My mother will intercede for us. He will forgive me.

No, Pyotr Andreyich. Masba answered. I will not marry you without your parents' blessing. Without their blessing there can be no happiness for you. Let us submit to God's will. If you find a wife, if you come to love another woman—God be with you. Pyotr Andreyich, I shall pray for you both.

She burst into tears and left me, I was about to follow her indoors but feeling that I could not control myself returned home

I was sitting plunged in deep thought when Savelyich broke in upon my reflections

Here, sir, he said giving me a piece of paper covered with writing, see if I am an informer against my master and if I try to make mischief between father and son

I took the paper from his hands it was Savelyich's answer to my father's letter Here it is word for word

Dear Sir Andrey Petrovich our Gracious Father!

I have received your gracious letter in which you are pleased to be angry with me your servant saying that I ought to be ashamed not to obey my master's orders I am not an old dog but your faithful servant I obey your orders and have always served you zealously and have lived so to be an old man I have not written anything to you about Pyotr Andreyich's wound so as not to alarm you needlessly for I hear that, as it is the mistress our mother Aidotya Vlasyvna has been taken ill with fright and I shall pray for her health Pyotr Andreyich was wounded in the chest under the right shoulder just under the bone three inches deep and he lay in the Commandant's house where we carried him from the river bank and the local barber Stepan Paramonov treated him and now thank God Pyotr Andreyich is well and there is nothing but good to be said of him His commanders I hear are pleased with him and Vasilisa Yegorovna treats him as though he were her own son And as to his having got into trouble that is no disgrace to him a horse has four legs and yet it stumbles And you are pleased to write that you will send me to herd pigs That is for you to *decide as my master Whereupon I humbly salute you Your faithful serf

Arhip Savelyev*

I could not help smiling more than once as I read the good old man's epistle. I felt I could not answer my father, and Savelyich's letter seemed to me sufficient to relieve my mother's anxiety.

From that time my position changed. Marya Ivanovna hardly spoke to me and did her utmost to avoid me. The Commandant's house lost all its attraction for me. I gradually accustomed myself to sit at home alone. Vasilisa Yegorovna chid me for it at first, but seeing my obstinacy left me in peace. I only saw Ivan Kuzmich when my duties required it. I seldom met Shvabrin and did so reluctantly, especially as I noticed his secret dislike of me, which confirmed my suspicions. Life became unbearable to me. I sank into despondent brooding, nurtured by idleness and isolation. My love grew more ardent in solitude and oppressed me more and more. I lost the taste for reading and composition. My spirits drooped. I was afraid that I should go out of my mind or plunge into dissipation. Unexpected events that had an important influence upon my life as a whole suddenly gave my mind a powerful and beneficial shock.

PUGACHOV'S REBELLION

*Listen now young men listen
To what we old men shall tell you*

A Foll Song

BEFORE I begin describing the strange events which I witnessed, I must say a few words about the situation in the Province of Orenburg at the end of 1773.

This vast and wealthy province was inhabited by a number of half savage peoples who had but recently acknowledged the authority of the Russian sovereigns. Unused to the laws and habits of civilized life cruel and reckless they constantly rebelled, and the Government had to watch over them unremittingly to keep them in submission. Fortresses had been built in suitable places and settled for the most part with Cossacks, who had owned the shores of Yruk for generations. But the Cossacks who were to guard the peace and safety of the place had themselves for some time past been a source of trouble and danger to the Government. In 1772 a rising took place in their chief town. It was caused by the stern measures adopted by Major General Traubenberg in order to bring the Cossacks into due submission. The result was the barbarous assassination of Traubenberg, a mutinous change in the administration of the Cossack army, and finally, the quelling of the mutiny by means of cannon and cruel punishments.

This had happened some time before I came to the Belogorsky fortress. All was quiet or seemed so: the authorities too easily believed the feigned repentance of the perfidious rebels who concealed their malice and waited for an opportunity to make fresh trouble.

To return to my story.

One evening (it was at the beginning of October 1773) I sat at home alone listening to the howling of the autumn wind and watching through the window the clouds that raced past the moon. Someone came to call me to the Commandant's. I went at once. I found there Shvabrin, Ivan Ignatyich, and the Cossack sergeant Maximych. Neither Vasilisa Yegorovna nor Marya Ivanovna was in the room. The Commandant looked troubled as he greeted me. He closed the doors, made us all sit down except the sergeant who was standing by the door pulled a letter out of his pocket and said Important news gentlemen! Listen to what the General writes He put on his spectacles and read the following

TO THE COMMANDANT OF THE BELOGORSKY FORTRESS CAPTAIN MIRONOV

Confidential

I inform you herewith that a runaway Don Cossack an Old Believer Emelyan Pugachov has perpetrated the unpardonable outrage of assuming the name of the deceased Emperor Peter III and assembling a criminal band has caused a rising in the Yask settlements and has already taken and sacked several fortresses committing murders and robberies everywhere In view of the above you have sir on receipt of this immediately to take the necessary measures for repulsing the aforementioned villain and pretender and if possible for completely destroying him should he attack the fortress entrusted to your care

Take the necessary measures said the Commandant removing his spectacles and folding the paper

That's easy enough to say let me tell you The villain is evidently strong and we have only a hundred and thirty men not counting the Cossacks on whom there is no relying—no offence meant Maximych (The sergeant smiled) However there is nothing for it gentlemen! Carry out your duties scrupulously arrange for sentry duty and night patrols in case of attack shut the gates and lead the soldiers afield And you Maximych keep a strict watch over your Cossacks The cannon must be seen to and cleaned properly And above all keep the whole thing secret so that no one in the fortress should know as yet

Having given us these orders, Ivan Kuzmich dismissed us. Shvabrin and I walked out together, talking of what we had just heard.

What will be the end of it, do you think? I asked him.

Heaven only knows, he answered. We shall see. So far, I don't think there is much in it. But if He sank into thought, and began absent muddledly whistling a French tune.

In spite of all our precautions the news of Pugachov spread throughout the fortress. Although Ivan Kuzmich greatly respected his wife, he would not for anything in the world have disclosed to her a military secret entrusted to him. Having received the General's letter, he rather skilfully got rid of Vasilisa Yegorovna by telling her that Father Gerasim had had some startling news from Orenburg, which he was guarding jealously. Vasilisa Yegorovna at once decided to go and call on the priest's wife and on Ivan Kuzmich's advice took Masha with her, lest the girl should feel lonely at home.

Finding himself master of the house, Ivan Kuzmich at once sent for us and locked Palasha in the pantry so that she should not listen at the door.

Vasilisa Yegorovna had not succeeded in gaining any information from the priest's wife and coming home she learned that in her absence Ivan Kuzmich had held a council and that Palasha had been locked up. She guessed that her husband had deceived her and began questioning him. Ivan Kuzmich, however, had been prepared for attack. He was not in the least abashed and boldly answered his inquisitive consort.

Our women, my dear, have taken to heating the stoves with straw. Let me tell you, and since this may cause a fire, I have given strict orders that in the future they should not use straw but wood.

Then why did you lock up Palasha? the Commandant's wife asked. What had the poor girl done to have to sit in the pantry till our return?

Ivan Kuzmich was not prepared for this question; he was confused and muttered something very incoherent. Vasilisa Yegorovna saw her husband's perfidy but knowing that she would not succeed in learning anything from him ceased her questions and began talking of pickled cucumbers which the priest's wife prepared in some very special way. Vasilisa Yegorovna could not sleep all night trying to guess what could be in her husband's mind that she was not supposed to know.

The next day returning from Mass she saw Ivan Ignatyich pulling out of the cannon bits of rag, stones, splinters, knuckle bones and all kinds of rubbish that boys had thrust into it.

What can these military preparations mean? the Commandant's wife wondered. Are they expecting another Kirghiz raid? But surely Ivan Kuzmich would not conceal such trifles from me! She hailed Ivan Ignatyich with the firm intention of finding out from him the secret that tormented her feminine curiosity.

Vasilisa Yegorovna made several remarks to him about housekeeping just as a magistrate who is cross-examining a prisoner begins with irrelevant questions so as to take him off his guard. Then after a few moments silence she sighed deeply and said shaking her head.

"Oh dear oh dear! Just think what news! Whatever will come of it?"

Don't you worry madam Ivan Ignatyich answered. God willing all will be well. We have soldiers enough plenty of gunpowder and I have cleaned meet him and lay the banners at his feet! Ah the dog! Doesn't he know that we've been forty years in the army and have seen a thing or two? Surely no commanders have listened to the brigand?

I should not have thought so. Ivan Kuzmich answered, but it appears the villain has already taken many fortresses.

He must really be strong then. Shvabrin remarked.

We are just going to find out his real strength, said the Commandant. Vasilisa Yegorovna, give me the key of the storehouse. Ivan Ignatyich, bring the Bashkir and tell Yulay to bring the whip.

Wait, Ivan Kuzmich said. The Commandant's wife getting up. Let me take Masha out of the house, she will be terrified if she hears the screams. And to tell the truth, I don't care for the business myself. Good luck to you.

In the old days torture formed so integral a part of judicial procedure that the beneficent law which abolished it long remained a dead letter. It used to be thought that the criminal's own confession was necessary for convicting him, which is both groundless and wholly opposed to judicial good sense, for if the accused person's denial of the charge is not considered a proof of his innocence, there is still less reason to regard his confession a proof of his guilt. Even now I sometimes hear old judges regretting the abolition of the barbarous custom. But in those days no one doubted the necessity of torture—neither the judges nor the accused. And so the Commandant's order did not surprise or alarm us. Ivan Ignatyich went to fetch the Bashkir, who was locked up in Vasilisa Yegorovna's storehouse, and a few minutes later the prisoner was led into the entry. The Commandant gave word for him to be brought into the room.

The Bashkir crossed the threshold with difficulty.

Then why did you lock up Palasha? the Commandant's wife asked. What had the poor girl done to have to sit in the pantry till our return?

Ivan Kuzmich was not prepared for this question he was confused and muttered something very incoherent. Vasilisa Yegorovna saw her husband's perfidy but knowing that she would not succeed in learning anything from him ceased her questions and began talking of pickled cucumbers which the priest's wife prepared in some very special way. Vasilisa Yegorovna could not sleep all night trying to guess what could be in her husband's mind that she was not supposed to know.

"Oh dear oh dear! Just think what news! Whatever will come of it?"

Don't you worry madam Ivan Ignatyich answered. God willing all will be well. We have soldiers enough plenty of gunpowder and I have cleaned the cannon. We may yet keep Pugachov at bay. Whom God helps, nobody can harm.

And what sort of man is this Pugachov?" she asked.

Ivan Ignatyich saw that he had made a slip and tried not to answer. But it was too late. Vasilisa Yego once forced him to confess everything, promising not to repeat it to anyone.

She kept her promise and did not say a word to any one except to the priest's wife, and that was only because her cow was still grazing in the steppe and might be seized by the rebels.

Soon everyone began talking about Pugachov. The rumors differed. The Commandant sent Maximych to find out all he could in the neighboring villages and fortresses. The sergeant returned after two days' absence and said that in the steppe, some forty miles from the fortress, he had seen a lot of lights and had heard from the Dashkirs that a host of unknown size was approaching. He could not, however, say anything definite for he had not ventured to go any farther.

The Cossacks in the fortress were obviously in a state of great agitation. In every street they stood about in groups, whispering together, dispersing as soon as they saw a dragoon or a garrison soldier. Spies were sent among them. Yulay, a Kalmuck converted to the Christian faith, brought important information to the Commandant. Yulay said that the sergeant's report was false. On his return, the sly Cossack told his comrades that he had seen the rebels, presented himself to their leader, who gave him his hand to kiss and held a long conversation with him. The Commandant immediately arrested Maximych and put Yulay in his place. This step was received with obvious displeasure by the Cossacks. They murmured aloud and Ivan Ignatyich, who had to carry out the Commandant's order, heard with his own ears how they said, "You will catch it presently, you garrison rat! The Commandant had intended to question his prisoner the same day but Maximych had escaped probably with the help of his comrades

Another thing helped to increase the Commandant's anxiety. A Bashkir was caught carrying seditious papers. On this occasion the Commandant thought of calling his officers together once more and again wanted to send Vasilisa Yegorovna away on some pretext. But since Ivan Kuzmich was a most truthful and straightforward man, he could think of no other device than the one he had used before.

I say Vasilisa Yegorovna, he began, clearing his throat. Father Gerasim I hear has received from town.

Don't you tell stories, Ivan Kuzmich, his wife interrupted him. I expect you want to call a council to talk about Emelyan Pugachov without me, but you won't deceive me.

Ivan Kuzmich stared at her.

Well, my dear, he said, if you know all about it already, you may as well stay. We will talk before you.

That's better, man, she answered. You are no hand at deception. Send for the officers.

We assembled again. Ivan Kuzmich read to us, in his wife's presence, Pugachov's manifesto written by some half-literate Cossack. The villain declared his intention to march against our fortress at once, invited the Cossacks and the soldiers to join his band, and exhorted the commanders not to resist him, threatening to put them to death if they did. The manifesto was written in crude but forceful language and must have produced a strong impression upon the minds of simple people.

The rascal, cried Vasilisa Yegorovna, To think of his daring to make us such offers! We are to go and meet him and lay the banners at his feet! Ah the dog! Doesn't he know that we've been forty years in the army and have seen a thing or two? Surely no commanders have listened to the brigand?

I should not have thought so. Ivan Kuzmich answered, but it appears the villain has already taken many fortresses.

He must really be strong then. Shvabrin remarked.

We are just going to find out his real strength, said the Commandant. Vasilisa Yegorovna gave me the key of the storehouse. Ivan Ignatyich bring the Bashkir and tell Yulay to bring the whip.

Wait, Ivan Kuzmich said the Commandant's wife getting up. Let me take Masha out of the house she will be terrified if she hears the screams. And to tell the truth I don't care for the business myself. Good luck to you.

In the old days torture formed so integral a part of judicial procedure that the beneficent law which abolished it long remained a dead letter. It used to be thought that the criminal's own confession was necessary for convicting him, which is both groundless and wholly opposed to judicial good sense, for if the accused person's denial of the charge is not considered a proof of his innocence, there is still less reason to regard his confession a proof of his guilt. Even now I sometimes hear old judges regretting the abolition of the barbarous custom. But in those days no one doubted the necessity of torture—neither the judges nor the accused. And so the Commandant's order did not surprise or alarm us. Ivan Ignatyich went to fetch the Bashkir, who was locked up in Vasilisa Yegorovna's storehouse, and a few minutes later the prisoner was led into the entry. The Commandant gave word for him to be brought into the room.

The Bashkir crossed the threshold with difficulty.

(he was wearing fetters) and taking off his tall cap stood by the door I glanced at him and shuddered I shall never forget that man He seemed to be over seventy He had neither nose nor ears His head was shaven instead of a beard a few gray hairs stuck out he was small thin and bent but his narrow eyes still had a gleam in them

Ahal said the Commandant recognizing by the terrible marks one of the rebels punished in 1741 I see you are an old wolf and have been in our snares Rebelling must be an old game to you to judge by the look of your head Come nearer tell me who sent you?

The old Bashkir was silent and gazed at the Commandant with an utterly senseless expression

Why don't you speak? Ivan Kuzmuch continued Don't you understand Russian? Yulay ask him in your language who sent him to our fortress?

Yulay repeated Ivan Kuzmuch's question in Tatar But the Bashkir looked at him with the same expression and did not answer a word

Very well! the Commandant said I will make you speak! Lads take off his stupid striped gown and streak his back Mind you do it thoroughly Yulay!

Two veterans began undressing the Bashkir The unfortunate man's face expressed anxiety He looked about him like some wild creature caught by children But when the old man was made to put his hands round the veteran's neck and was lifted off the ground and Yulay brandished the whip the Bashkir groaned in a weak imploring voice and nodding his head opened his mouth in which a short stump could be seen instead of a tongue

When I recall that this happened in my lifetime and that now I have lived to see the gentle reign of the Emperor Alexander, I cannot but marvel at the rapid progress of enlightenment and the diffusion of hu man's principles. Young man! If my notes ever fall into your hands, remember that the best and most permanent changes are those due to the softening of manners and morals and not to any violent upheavals.

It was a shock to all of us.

Well, said the Commandant, we evidently cannot learn much from him. Yulay, take the Bashkir back to the storehouse. We have a few more things to talk over, gentlemen.

We began discussing our position when suddenly Vasilisa Yegorovna came into the room breathless and looking extremely alarmed.

What is the matter with you? the Commandant asked in surprise.

My dear dreadful news! Vasilisa Yegorovna answered. The Nizhneozerny fortress was taken this morning. Father Gerasim's servant has just returned from there. He saw it being taken. The Commandant and all the officers were hanged. All the soldiers were taken prisoners. The villains may be here any minute.

The unexpected news was a great shock to me. I knew the Commandant of the Nizhneozerny fortress a modest and quiet young man, some two months before he had put up at Ivan Kuzmich's on his way from Orenburg with his young wife. The Nizhneozerny fortress was some fifteen miles from our fortress. Pugachov might attack us any moment now. I vividly imagined Marya Ivanovna's fate and my heart sank.

Listen, Ivan Kuzmich, I said to the Commandant, it is our duty to defend the fortress to our last breath, this goes without saying. But we must think of the women's safety. Send them to Orenburg if the road is still free, or to some reliable fortress farther away out of the villain's reach.

Ivan Kuzmich turned to his wife and said:

I say, my dear, hadn't I indeed better send you and Masha away while we settle the rebels?

Oh nonsense! she replied. No fortress is safe from bullets. What's wrong with the Belogorsky? We have lived in it for twenty-two years, thank Heaven! We have seen the Bashkir and the Kirghiz. God willing, Pugachov won't harm us either.

Well, my dear Ivan Kuzmich replied, stay if you like, since you rely on our fortress. But what are we to do about Masha? It is all very well if we ward them off or last out till reinforcements come, but what if the villains take the fortress?

Well, then—

Vasilisa Yegorovna stopped with an air of extreme agitation.

No, Vasilisa Yegorovna, the Commandant continued, noting that his words had produced an effect perhaps for the first time in his life, it's not fit for Masha to stay here. Let us send her to Orenburg to her godmother's; there are plenty of soldiers there and enough artillery and a stone wall. And I would advise you to go with her; you may be an old woman, but you'll see what they'll do to you if they take the fortress.

Very well, said the Commandant's wife, so be it, let us send Masha away. But don't you dream of asking me—I won't go. I wouldn't think of parting from you in my old age and seeking a lonely grave far away. Live together, die together.

There is something in that," said the Commandant. "Well, we must not waste time. You had better get Masha ready for the journey. We will send her at day-break tomorrow and give her an escort, though we have no men to spare. But where is Masha?"

"At Akulina Parnilovna's," the Commandant's wife answered. "She fainted when she heard about the Nishneozerny being taken. I am afraid of her falling ill."

Vasilisa Yegorovna went to see about her daughter.

ter's departure The conversation continued but I took no part in it and did not listen Marya Ivanovna came in to supper, pale and with tear stained eyes We ate supper in silence and rose from the table sooner than usual saying good bye to the family, we went to our lodgings But I purposely left my sword behind and went back for it I had a feeling that I should find Marya Ivanovna alone Indeed, she met me at the door and handed me my sword

Good bye Pyotr Andreyich she said to me with tears I am being sent to Orenburg May you live and be happy, perhaps God will grant that we meet again, and if not

She broke into sobs I embraced her

Good bye my angel I said good bye my sweet, my darling! Whatever happens to me, believe that my last thought and my last prayer will be for you!

Masha sobbed with her head on my shoulder I kissed her ardently and hastened out of the room.

THE ATTACK

*Oh my poor head a soldier's head!
It served the Czar truly and faithfully
For thirty years and three years more
It won for itself neither gold nor joy
No word of praise and no high rank
All it has won is a gallows high
With a cross beam made of maple wood
And a noose of twisted silk*

A Folk Song

I DID not undress or sleep that night I intended to go at dawn to the fortress gate from which Marya Ivanov na was to start on her journey and there to say good bye to her for the last time I was conscious of a great change in myself the agitation of my mind was much less oppressive than the gloom in which I had but recently been plunged The grief of parting was mingled with vague but delicious hope with eager expectation of danger and a feeling of noble ambition The night passed imperceptibly I was on the point of going out when my door opened and the corporal came to tell me that our Cossacks had left the fortress in the night taking Yulay with them by force and that strange men were riding about outside the fortress The thought that Marya Ivanovna might not have time to leave terrified me I hastily gave a few instructions to the corporal and rushed off to the Commandant's

It was already daybreak As I ran down the street I heard someone calling me I stopped

Where are you going? Ivan Ignatyich asked overtaking me Ivan Kuzmich is on the rampart and has sent me for you Pugachov has come

Has Marya Ivanovna left? I asked with a sinking heart

She has not had time Ivan Ignatyich answered 'The road to Orenburg is cut off the fortress is surrounded It is a bad lookout Pyotr Andreyich!

We went to the rampart—a natural rise in the ground reinforced by palisading All the inhabitants of the fortress were crowding there The garrison stood under arms The cannon had been moved there the day before The Commandant was walking up and down in front of his small detachment The presence of danger inspired the old soldier with extraordinary vigor Some twenty men on horseback were riding to and fro in the steppe not far from the fortress They seemed to be Cossacks, but there were Bashkirs among them easily recognized by their lynx caps and quivers The Commandant walked through the ranks, saying to the soldiers: Well, children, let us stand up for our Empress and prove to all the world that we are brave and loyal men! The soldiers loudly expressed their zeal. Shvabrin stood next to me, looking intently at the enemy. Noticing the commotion in the fortress, the horsemen in the steppe met together and began talking. The Commandant told Ivan Ignatovich to aim the cannon at the group and fired it himself. The cannon ball flew with a buzzing sound over their heads without doing any damage. The horsemen dispersed and instantly galloped away, and the steppe was empty.

At that moment Vasilisa Yegorovna appeared on the rampart, followed by Masha, who would not leave her.

Well, what's happening? the Commandant's wife asked. How is the battle going? Where is the enemy?

The enemy is not far. Ivan Kuzmich answered. God willing, all shall be well. Well, Masha, aren't you afraid?

No, father. Marya Ivanovna answered. It is worse at home by myself.

She looked at me and made an effort to smile. I clasped the hilt of my sword, remembering that the day before I had received it from her hands, as though for the protection of my lady love. My heart was glowing; I fancied myself her knight. I longed to prove that I was worthy of her trust and waited impatiently for the decisive moment.

Just then fresh crowds of horsemen appeared from behind a hill that was less than half a mile from the fortress, and soon the steppe was covered with a multitude of men armed with spears and bows and arrows. A man in a red coat, with a bare sword in his hand, was riding among them mounted on a white horse it was Pugachov. He stopped the others surrounded him. Four men galloped at full speed evidently at his command right up to the fortress. We recognized them as our own treacherous Cossacks. One of them was holding a sheet of paper over his cap another carried on the point of his spear Yulay's head which he shook off and threw to us over the palisade. The poor Kalmuck's head fell at the Commandant's feet the traitors shouted

Don't shoot come out to greet the Czar! the Czar is here!

I'll give it you! Ivan Kuzmich shouted Shoot, lads!

Our soldiers fired a volley. The Cossack who held the letter reeled and fell off his horse others galloped away. I glanced at Marya Ivanovna. Horrified by the sight of Yulay's blood-stained head and stunned by the volley she seemed dazed. The Commandant called the corporal and told him to take the paper out of the dead Cossack's hands. The corporal went out into the field and returned leading the dead man's horse by the bridle. He handed the letter to the Commandant. Ivan Kuzmich read it to himself and then tore it to bits. Meanwhile the rebels were evidently making ready for action. In a few minutes bullets whizzed in our ears and a few arrows stuck into the ground and the palisade near us.

Vasilisa Yegorovna said the Commandant this is no place for women take Masha home you see the girl is more dead than alive.

Vasilisa Yegorovna who had grown quiet when the bullets began to fly glanced at the steppe where a great deal of movement was noticeable then she turned to her husband and said

Ivan Kuzmich life and death are in God's hands bless Masha Masha go to your father!

Masha, pale and trembling went up to Ivan Kuzmich knelt before him and bowed down to the ground. The old Commandant made the sign of the cross over her three times then he raised her and kissing her said in a changed voice

Well, Masha may you be happy Pray to God, He will not forsake you If you find a good man may God give you love and concord Live as Vasilisa Yegorovna and I have lived Well, good bye, Masha Vasilisa Yegorovna make haste and take her away!

Masha flung her arms round his neck and sobbed

Let us kiss each other too said the Commandant's wife bursting into tears Good bye my Ivan Kuzmich Forgive me if I have vexed you in any way

Good bye good bye my dear said the Commandant embracing his old wife Well that will do! Make haste and go home and, if you have time, dress Masha in a sarafan

The Commandant's wife and daughter went away I followed Marya Ivanovna with my eyes she looked round and nodded to me Then Ivan Kuzmich turned to us and all his attention centered on the enemy The rebels assembled round their leader and suddenly began dismounting

Now stand firm the Commandant said They are going to attack

At that moment terrible shouting and yelling was heard the rebels were running fast toward the fortress Our cannon was loaded with grape shot The Commandant let them come quite near and then fired again The shot fell right in the middle of the crowd the rebels scattered and rushed back their leader alone did not retreat. He waved his saber and seemed to be persuading them The yelling and shouting that had stopped for a moment began again

Well lads the Commandant said now open the gates beat the drum Forward lads come out follow me!

The Commandant Ivan Ignatyich, and I were instantly beyond the rampart but the garrison lost their nerve and did not move

Why do you stand still children? Ivan Kuzmich shouted If we must die we must—it is all in the day's work!

At that moment the rebels ran up to us and rushed into the fortress The drum stopped the soldiers threw down their rifles I was knocked down but got up again and walked into the fortress together with the rebels The Commandant wounded in the head was surrounded by the villains who demanded the keys I rushed to his assistance several burly Cossacks seized me and bound me with their belts saying You will catch it presently you enemies of the Czar!

They dragged us along the streets the townspeople came out of their houses with offerings of bread and salt Church bells were ringing Suddenly they shouted in the crowd that the Czar was awaiting the prisoners in the square and receiving the oath of allegiance The people rushed to the square we were driven there also

Pugachov was sitting in an arm-chair on the steps of the Commandant's house He was wearing a red Cossack caftan trimmed with gold braid A tall sable cap with golden tassels was pushed low over his glittering eyes His face seemed familiar to me The Cossack elders surrounded him Father Gerasim pale and trembling was standing by the steps with a cross in his hands and seemed to be silently imploring mercy for future victims Gallows were being hastily put up in the square. As we approached the Bashkirs dispersed the crowd and brought us before Pugachov. The bells stopped ringing; there was a profound stillness.

Which is the Commandant? the Pretender asked.

Our Cossack sergeant stepped out of the crowd and pointed to Ivan Kuzmich. Pugachov looked at the old man menacingly and said to him:

How did you dare resist me, your Czar?

Exhausted by his wound the Commandant mustered his last strength and answered in a firm voice:

You are not my Czar; you are a thief and an impostor; let me tell you!

Pugachov frowned darkly and waved a white handkerchief. Several Cossacks seized the old Captain and dragged him to the gallows. The old Bashkir, whom we had questioned the night before, was sitting astride on the cross beam. He was holding a rope and a minute later I saw poor Ivan Kuzmich swing in the air. Then Ivan Ignatyich was brought before Pugachov.

Take the oath of allegiance to the Czar Peter III! Pugachov said to him.

You are not our monarch, Ivan Ignatyich answered, repeating his captain's words: you are a thief and an impostor, my dear!

Pugachov waved his handkerchief again and the good lieutenant swung by the side of his old chief.

It was my turn next. I boldly looked at Pugachov, making ready to repeat the answer of my noble comrades. At that moment to my extreme surprise I saw Shvabrin among the rebellious Cossacks; he was wearing a Cossack coat and had his hair cropped like theirs. He went up to Pugachov and whispered something in his ear.

Hang him! said Pugachov without looking at me.

My head was put through the noose. I began to pray silently, sincerely repenting before God of all my sins.

and begging Him to save all those dear to my heart I was dragged under the gallows

Never you fear the assassins repeated to me perhaps really wishing to cheer me

Suddenly I heard a shout Stop you wretches! Wait! The hangmen stopped I saw Savelyich lying at Pugachov's feet

Dear father the poor old man said what would a gentle born child's death profit you? Let him go they will give you a ransom for him and as an example and a warning to others hang me,—an old man!

Pugachov made a sign and they instantly untied me and let go of me Our father pardons you they told me

I cannot say that at that moment I rejoiced at being saved nor would I say that I regretted it My feelings were too confused I was brought before the Pretender once more and made to kneel down Pugachov stretched out his sinewy hand to me

Kiss his hand kiss his hand people around me said But I would have preferred the most cruel death to such vile humiliation

Pyotr Andreyich my dear Savelyich whispered standing behind me and pushing me forward don't be obstinate! What does it matter? Spit and kiss the vill—I mean kiss his hand!

I did not stir Pugachov let his hand drop saying with a laugh

His honor must have gone crazy with joy Raise him!

They pulled me up and left me in peace I began watching the terrible comedy

The townspeople were swearing allegiance They came up one after another kissed the cross and then bowed to the Pretender The garrison soldiers were there too The regimental tailor armed with his blunt scissors was cutting off their plaits. Shaking themselves they came to kiss Pugachov's hand. He granted them his pardon and enlisted them in his gang. All this went on for about three hours. At last Pugachov got up from the arm-chair and came down the steps accompanied by his elders. A white horse in a rich harness was brought to him. Two Cossacks took him by the arms and put him on the horse. He announced to Father Gerasim that he would have dinner at his house. At that moment a woman's cry was heard. Several brigands had dragged Vasilisa Yegorovna naked and disheveled on to the steps. One of them had already donned her coat. Others were carrying feather beds, boxes, crockery, linen and all sorts of household goods.

My dears, let me go! the poor old lady cried. "Have mercy, let me go to Ivan Kuzmich!"

Suddenly she saw the gallows and recognized her husband.

Villains! she cried in a frenzy. What have you done to him! Ivan Kuzmich, light of my eyes, soldier brave and bold! You came to no harm from Prussian swords or from Turkish guns; you laid down your life not in a fair combat but perished from a runaway thief!

Silence the old witch! said Pugachov.

A young Cossack hit her on the head with his sabre and she fell dead on the steps. Pugachov rode away and the people rushed after him.

AN UNBIDDEN GUEST

An unbidden guest is worse than a Tatar

A Proverb

THE square emptied. I was still standing there unable to collect my thoughts, confused by the terrible impressions of the day.

Uncertainty as to Marya Ivanovna's fate tortured me most. Where was she? What had happened to her? Had she had time to hide? Was her refuge secure? Full of anxious thoughts I entered the Commandant's house. All was empty: chairs, tables, boxes had been smashed, crockery broken, everything had been taken. I ran up the short stairway that led to the top floor and for the first time in my life entered Marya Ivanovna's room. I saw her bed pulled to pieces by the brigands; the wardrobe had been broken and pillaged; the sanctuary lamp was still burning before the empty ikon stand. The little mirror that hung between the windows had been left too. Where was the mistress of this humble virginal cell? A terrible thought flashed through my mind. I imagined her in the brigands' hands. My heart sank. I wept bitterly and called aloud my beloved's name. At that moment I heard a slight noise and Palasha, pale and trembling, appeared from behind the wardrobe.

Ah, Pyotr Andreyich! she cried, clasping her hands. What a day! What horrors!

And Marya Ivanovna? I asked impatiently. What has happened to her?

She is alive, Palasha answered. She is hiding in Akulina Pamfilovna's house.

At the priest's I cried in horror Good God! Pugachov is there!

I dashed out of the room instantly found myself in the street and ran headlong to the priest's house not seeing or feeling anything Shouts laughter, and songs came from there Pugachov was feasting with his comrades Palasha followed me I sent her to call out Akulina Parnilovna without attracting attention A minute later the priest's wife came into the entry to speak to me with an empty bottle in her hands

For God's sake where is Marva Ivanovna? I asked with inexpressible anxiety

She is lying on my bed there, behind the partition, poor darling the priest's wife answered Well Pyotr Andreyich we very nearly had trouble but thank God, all passed off well the villain had just sat down to dinner when she poor thing, came to herself and groaned I simply gasped! He heard Who is it groaning there old woman? he said I made a deep bow to the thief My niece is ill sire she has been in bed for a fortnight And is your niece young? She is sire Show me your niece, old woman My heart sank but there was nothing for it Certainly sire only the girl cannot get up and come into your presence — Never mind old woman I will go and have a look at her myself And you know the wretch did go behind the partition what do you think? He drew back the curtain glanced at her with hawk's eyes—and nothing happened God saved us! But would you believe it both my husband and I had prepared to die a martyr's death Fortunately the dear girl did not know who he was Good Lord what things we have lived to see! Poor Ivan Kuzmich! Who would have thought it! And Vasilisa Yegorovna! and Ivan Ignatyich! What did they hang him for? How is it you were spared?

And what do you think of Shvabrin? You know he cropped his hair like a Cossack and is sitting here with them feasting! He is a sharp one there's no gainsaying! And when I spoke about my sick niece his eyes would you believe it went through me like a knife but he hasn't betrayed us and that's something to be thankful for

At that moment the drunken shouts of the guests were heard and Father Gerasim's voice. The guests were clamoring for more drink and the priest was calling his wife Akulina Pamiilovna was in a flutter

You go home now Pyotr Andreyich she said I haven't any time for you the villains are drinking. It might be the end of you if they met you now Good-bye Pyotr Andreyich What is to be will be I hope God will not forsake us!

The priest's wife left me I set off to my lodgings feeling somewhat calmer. As I passed through the market place I saw several bashkirs who crowded round the gallows pulling the boots off the hanged men's feet. I had difficulty in suppressing my indignation but I knew that it would have been useless to intervene. The brigands were running about the fortress plundering the officers' quarters. The shouts of the drunken rebels resounded everywhere. I reached my lodgings Savelich met me at the threshold

"Thank God! he cried when he saw me I was afraid the villains had seized you again. Well Pyotr Andreyich my dear! Would you believe it the rascals have robbed us of everything clothes linen crockery—they have left nothing. But there! Thank God they let you off with your life! Did you recognize their leader

No I didn't why who is he?

What sir? You have forgotten that drunkard who took the hareskin jacket from you at the inn? The coat was as good as new and the brute tore it along the seams as he struggled into it!

I was surprised. Indeed Pugachov had a striking resemblance to my guide. I felt certain Pugrichov and he were the same person and understood the reason for his sparing me. I could not help marveling at the strange concatenation of circumstances—a child's coat given to a tramp had saved me from the gallows and a drunkard who had wandered from inn to inn was besieging fortresses and shaking the foundations of the State!

Won't you have something to eat? asked Sivel'yich true to his habit. There is nothing at home. I will look about and prepare something for you.

Left alone I sank into thought. What was I to do? It was not fitting for an officer to remain in a fortress that belonged to the villain or to follow his gang. It was my duty to go where my services could be of use to my country in the present trying circumstances. But love prompted me to stay by Marya Ivanovna to protect and defend her. Although I had no doubt that things would soon change I could not help shuddering at the thought of the danger she was in.

My reflections were interrupted by the arrival of a Cossack who had run to tell me that the great Czar was asking for me.

Where is he? I said making ready to obey.

In the Commandant's house the Cossack answered. After dinner our father went to the bath house and now he is resting. Well your honor one can see by everything that he is a person of importance at dinner he was pleased to eat two roast sucking pigs and he likes the bath house so hot that even Taras Ku-rochkin could not stand it—he passed on the birch to Fomka Bikbaev, and had to have cold water poured over him. There's no denying it, all his ways are so grand. And they say in the bath house he showed them the royal marks on his breast: on one side the two-headed eagle, the size of a penny, and on the other his own likeness.

I did not think it necessary to dispute the Cossack's opinion and together with him went to the Commandant's house, trying to picture my meeting with Pugachov and wondering how it would end. The reader may well guess that I was not altogether calm.

It was growing dusk when I reached the Commandant's house. The gallows with its victims loomed menacingly in the dark. Poor Vasilisa Yegorovna's body was still lying at the bottom of the steps, where two Cossacks were mounting guard. The Cossack who had brought me went to announce me and returning at once led me into the room where the night before I had taken such tender leave of Marya Ivanovna.

An extraordinary scene was before me. Pugachov and a dozen Cossack elders, wearing colored shirts and caps, were sitting round a table covered with a cloth and littered with bottles and glasses; their faces were flushed with drink and their eyes glittered. Neither Shvabrin nor our sergeant—the freshly recruited traitors—were among them.

Ah, your honor! said Pugachov when he saw me come and be my guest. Here is a place for you; you are very welcome.

The company made room for me. I sat down at the end of the table without speaking. My neighbor, a slim and good-looking young Cossack, poured out a glass of vodka for me, which I did not touch. I looked at my companions with curiosity. Pugachov sat in the place of honor, leaning on the table, his black beard propped up with his broad fist. His features regular and rather pleasant, had nothing ferocious about them. He often turned to a man of fifty addressing him sometimes as Count sometimes as Timofeich and occasionally calling him uncle. They all treated one another as comrades and showed no particular deference to their leader. They talked of the morning's attack of the success of the rising and of the plans for the future. Everyone boasted offered his opinion and freely argued with Pugachov. At this strange council of war it was decided to go to Orenburg a bold move which was very nearly crowned with disastrous success! The march was to begin the following day.

Well brothers Pugachov said let us have my favorite song before we go to bed Chumakov strike up!

My neighbor began in a high pitched voice a mournful boatmen's song and all joined in

*Murmur not mother forest of rustling green leaves
Hinder not a brave lad thinking his thoughts
For to-morrow I go before the judgment seat
Before the dreaded judge our sovereign Czar
And the Czar our lord will ask me
Tell me now good lad tell me peasant's son
With whom didst thou go robbing and plundering
And how many were thy comrades bold?
I shall tell thee the whole truth and naught but truth
Four in number were my comrades bold
My first trusty comrade was the dark night
And my second true comrade—my knife of steel
And my third one was my faithful steed
And the fourth one was my stout bow
And my messengers were my arrows sharp
Then our Christian Czar will thus speak to me
Well done good lad thou peasant's son!
Thou knowest how to rob and to answer for it
And a fine reward is in store for thee—
A mansion high in the open plain
Two pillars and a cross beam I grant thee*

I cannot describe how affected I was by this peasant song about the gallows sung by men doomed to the gallows. Their menacing faces, their tuneful voices, their mournful expression they gave to the words expressive enough in themselves—it all thrilled me with a feeling akin to awe.

The guests drank one more glass, got up from the table and took leave of Pugachov. I was about to follow them when Pugachov said to me:

But still I want to talk to you.

We were left alone. We were both silent for a few minutes. Pugachov was watching me intently, occasionally screwing up his left eye with an extraordinary expression of slyness and mockery. At last he laughed with such unaffected gaiety that as I looked at him I laughed too without knowing why.

Well, your honor? he said to me. Confess you had a bit of a fright when my lads put your head in the noose? I expect the sky seemed no bigger than a sheepskin to you. And you would have certainly swung if it had not been for your servant. I knew the old creature at once. Well, did you think your honor that the man who brought you to the inn was the great Czar himself? (He assumed an air of mystery and importance.) You are very much at fault, he continued, but I have spared you for your kindness, for your having done me a service when I had to hide from my enemies. But this is nothing to what you shall see! It is not to be compared to the favor I'll show you when I obtain my kingdom! Do you promise to serve me zealously?

The rascal's question and his impudence struck me as so amusing that I could not help smiling.

What are you smiling at? he asked with a frown. Don't you believe I am the Czar? Answer me plainly.

I was confused I felt I could not acknowledge the tramp as Czar to do so seemed to me unpardonable cowardice To call him an impostor to his face meant certain death, and what I was ready to do under the gallows in sight of all the people and in the first flush of indignation now seemed to me useless bravado I hesitated Pugachov gloomily awaited my reply At last (and to this day I recall that moment with self satisfaction) the feeling of duty triumphed over human weakness I said to Pugachov

Listen I will tell you the whole truth Think how can I acknowledge you as Czar? You are an intelligent man you would see I was pretending

Who then do you think I am?

God only knows but whoever you may be you are playing a dangerous game

Pugachov threw a swift glance at me

So you don't believe he said that I am the Czar Peter III? Very well But there is such a thing as success for the bold Didn't Grishka Otrepyev¹ reign in the old days? Think of me what you like but follow me What does it matter to you? One master is as good as another Serve me truly and faithfully and I'll make you Field Marshal and Prince What do you say?

No I answered firmly "I am a gentleman by birth I swore allegiance to the Empress I cannot serve you If you really wish me well let me go to Orenburg

Pugachov was thoughtful

"And if I let you go he said "will you promise at any rate, not to fight against me?"

"How can I promise that? I answered You know yourself I am not free to do as I like if they send me against you I shall go there is nothing for it You

¹Pseudo Demetrius I an alleged impostor who ruled Russia 1605-1606 yourself are a leader now you require obedience from those who serve under you What would you call it if I refused to fight when my service was required? My life is in your hands if you let me go I will thank you if you hang me God be your judge but I have told you the truth

My sincerity impressed Pugachov

So be it he said clapping me on the shoulder I don't do things by halves Go wherever you like and do what you think best Come to morrow to say good bye to me and now go to bed I too am sleepy

I left Pugachov and went out into the street The night was still and frostry The moon and the stars shone brightly shedding their light on the square and the gallows In the fortress all was dark and quiet Only the tavern windows were lighted and the shouts of late revellers came from there I looked at the priest's house The gates and shutters were closed All seemed quiet there

I went home and found Savelyich grieving for my absence The news of my freedom delighted him more than I can say

Thanks be to God! he said crossing himself We shall leave the fortress as soon as it is light and go straight away I have prepared some supper for you my dear have something to eat and then sleep peacefully till morning

I followed his advice and having eaten my supper with great relish went to sleep on the bare floor exhausted both in mind and body

THE PARTING

*Sweet it was O dear heart
To meet and learn to love thee
But sad it was from thee to part—
As though my soul fled from me*

Aheraskov

EARLY in the morning I was awakened by the drum. I went to the square. Pugachov's crowds were already forming into ranks by the gallows where the victims of the day before were still hanging. The Cossacks were on horseback, the soldiers under arms. Banners were flying. Several cannon, among which I recognized ours, were placed on their carriages. All the inhabitants were there too, waiting for the impostor. A Cossack stood at the steps of the Commandant's house, holding a beautiful white Kirghiz horse by the bridle. I arched with my eyes for Vasilisa Yegorovna's body. It had been moved a little to one side and covered with a piece of matting. At last Pugachov appeared in the doorway. The people took off their caps. Pugachov stood on the steps and greeted them all. One of the elders gave him a bag of coppers and he began throwing them down in handfuls. The crowd rushed to pick them up, shouting, some were hurt in the scramble. Pugachov was surrounded by his chief confederates. Shvabrin was among them. Our eyes met, he could read contempt in mine, and he turned away with an expression of sincere malice and feigned mockery. Catching sight of me in the crowd, Pugachov nodded and beckoned to me. Listen, he said to me, Go at once to Orenburg and tell the Governor and all his generals from me that they are to expect me in a week. Advise them to meet me with childlike love and obedience else they will not escape a cruel death. A pleasant journey to you your honor!

Then he turned to the people and said pointing to Shvabrin. Here children is your new commandant. Obey him in everything and he will be answerable to me for you and the fortress.

I heard these words with horror. Shvabrin was put in command of the fortress. Marya Ivanovna would be in his power! My God! what would become of her? Pugachov came down the steps. His horse was brought to him. He quickly jumped into the saddle without waiting for the Cossacks to help him. At that moment I saw my Savelyich step out of the crowd and hand Pugachov a sheet of paper. I could not imagine what this would lead to.

What is this? Pugachov asked with an air of importance.

Read and you will see. Savelyich answered.

Pugachov took the paper and gazed at it significantly for a few moments.

Why do you write so illegibly? he said at last. Our bright eyes can make nothing of it. Where is my chief secretary?

A young man in a corporal's uniform at once ran up to Pugachov.

Read it aloud said the impostor giving him the paper. I was extremely curious to know what Savelyich could have written to Pugachov. The chief secretary began reading aloud syllable by syllable.

Two dressing gowns one cotton and one striped silk worth six rubles.

What does this mean? Pugachov asked with a frown.

Tell him to read on. Savelyich answered calmly.

The chief secretary continued

A uniform coat of fine green cloth worth seven rubles White cloth trousers, worth five rubles Twelve fine linen shirts with frilled cuffs worth ten rubles A tea set worth two and a half rubles

What nonsense is this? Pugachov interrupted him

What do I care about tea sets and frilled cuffs and trousers?

Savelyich cleared his throat and began explaining

Well you see, sir this is a list of my master's goods stolen by the villains

What villains? Pugachov said menacingly

I am sorry it was a slip of the tongue Savelyich answered They are not villains, of course your men but they rummaged about and took these things Don't be angry a horse has four legs and yet it stumbles Tell him to read to the end anyway

"Read on" Pugachov said

The secretary continued

A cotton bedspread, a silk eiderdown worth four rubles A red cloth coat lined with fox fur worth forty rubles Also a hare-skin jacket given to your honor at the inn worth fifteen rubles

"What next! Pugachov shouted with blazing eyes

I confess I was alarmed for Savelyich He was about to give more explanations, but Pugachov interrupted him

How dare you trouble me with such trifles!" he cried seizing the paper from the secretary's hands and throwing it in Savelyich's face Stupid old man! They have been robbed—as though it mattered! Why, you old dodderer you ought to pray for the rest of your life for me and my men and thank your stars that you and your master are not swinging here together with those who rebelled against me Hare-skin jacket indeed!

I'll give you a harskim jacket! Why I'll have you flayed alive and make a jacket of your skin!

As you please Savelyich answered. But I am a bondman and have to answer for my master's property.

Pugachov was evidently in a generous mood. He turned away and rode off without saying another word. Shvabrin and the Cossack elders followed him. The gang left the fortress in an orderly fashion. The townspeople walked out some distance after Pugachov. Savelyich and I were left alone in the square. He was holding the paper in his hands and examining it with an air of deep regret.

Seeing that I was on good terms with Pugachov he had decided to take advantage of it, but his wise intention did not meet with success. I tried to scold him for his misplaced zeal but could not help laughing.

It's all very well to laugh, sir, Savelyich answered. It won't be so amusing when we shall have to buy everything afresh!

I hastened to the priest's house to see Marya Ivanovna. The priest's wife had bad news for me. In the night Marya Ivanovna had developed a fever. She lay unconscious and delirious. Akubna Pamfilovna took me into her room. I walked quietly to the bedside. The change in her face struck me. She did not know me. I stood beside her for some time without listening to Father Gerasim and his kind wife who were, I think, trying to comfort me. Gloomy thoughts tormented me. The condition of the poor defenceless orphan left among the vindictive rebels and my own helplessness terrified me. The thought of Shvabrin tortured my imagination more than anything. Given power by the Pretender put in charge of the fortress where the unhappy girl—the innocent object of his hatred—remain ed he might do anything What was I to do? How could I help her? How could I free her from the villain's hands? There was only one thing left me I decided to go to Orenburg that very hour and do my utmost to hasten the relief of the Belogorsky fortress I said good bye to the priest and to Akulina Pamfilovna begging them to take care of Marya Ivanovna whom I already regarded as my wife I took the poor girl's hand and kissed it wetting it with my tears

Good bye, said the priest's wife, taking leave of me good bye Pyotr Andreyich I hope we shall meet in better times Don't forget us and write to us often Poor Marya Ivanovna has now no one to comfort and defend her but you

Coming out into the square I stopped for a moment to look at the gallows bowed down before it and left the fortress by the Orenburg road accompanied by Savelyich who kept pace with me

I walked on occupied with my thoughts when I suddenly heard the sound of a horse's hoofs behind me I turned round and saw a Cossack galloping from the fortress he was leading a Bashkir horse by the bridle and signaling to me from a distance I stopped and soon recognized our sergeant Overtaking me he dismounted and said, giving me the reins of the other horse

Your honor our father presents you with a horse and a fur coat of his own (a sheepskin coat was tied to the saddle) and he also presents you —Mavumych hesitated— with fifty kopecks in money but I lost it on the way kindly forgive me

Savelyich looked at him askance and grumbled Lost it on the way! And what is this rattling in the breast of your coat? You've got no conscience!

What is rattling in the breast of my coat? replied the sergeant not in the least abashed Why, mercy on us my good man! that's my bridle and not the fifty kopecks!

Very well I said, interrupting the argument. Thank from me him who sent you and on your way back try to pick up the money you dropped and take it for vodka.

Thank you very much your honor he answered turning his horse. I shall pray for you as long as I live.

With these words he galloped back holding with one hand the breast of his coat and in another minute was lost to sight. I put on the sheepskin and mounted the horse making Savelyich sit behind me.

You see now sir the old man said it was not for nothing I presented the petition to the rascal the thief's conscience pricked him. It's true the long legged Bashkir nag and the sheepskin coat are not worth half of what they have stolen from us the rascals and what you had yourself given him but it will come in useful one may as well get a piece of wool off a fierce dog.

THE SIEGE OF THE TOWN

*He pitched his camp upon the hills and meadows
And eagle like he gazed upon the city
He had a mound made beyond the camp
Concealing fire which at night he brought to city walls*
Kheraskov

AS WE approached Orenburg we saw a crowd of convicts with shaven heads and faces disfigured by the branding iron. They were working at the fortifications under the supervision of garrison soldiers. Some were carting away the rubbish with which the moat had been filled others were digging on the ramparts masons were carrying bricks mending the town wall At the gates we were stopped by the sentries who asked for our passports As soon as the sergeant heard that I came from the Belogorsky fortress he took me straight to the General's house

I found the General in the garden He was examining the apple trees already bared by the breath of autumn and with the help of an old gardener, was carefully wrapping them up in warm straw His face wore a look of serenity health and good nature He was pleased to see me and began questioning me about the terrible happenings I had witnessed I told him every thing The old man listened to me attentively as he pruned the trees

Poor Mironov! he said when I finished my sad story I am sorry for him he was a fine officer and Madam Mironov was an excellent woman and so good at pickling mushrooms! And what has become of Masha the Captain's daughter?

I answered that she remained at the fortress in the charge of the priest's wife

Aie aie aie! the General remarked that's bad very bad There is certainly no relying on the brigands discipline What will become of the poor girl?

I answered that the Belogorsky fortress was not far and that probably his Excellency would not delay in sending troops to deliver its poor inhabitants The General shook his head doubtfully We shall see we shall see he said There will be time enough to talk of this Please come and have a cup of tea with me I am having a council of war today You can give us exact information about the rascal Pugachov and his troops And meanwhile go and have a rest!

I went to the quarters allotted to me, where Savel which was already setting things to rights and waited impatiently for the appointed hour. The reader may well imagine that I did not fail to appear at the council which was of such importance to my future. At the appointed time I was at the General's.

I found there one of the town officials, the director of the customs house, if I remember rightly a stout rosy checked old man in a brocade coat. He asked me about the fate of Ivan Kuzmich with whom he was connected and often interrupted me with fresh questions and moral observations which proved, if not his skill in the art of war, at any rate his natural quickness and intelligence. Meanwhile other guests arrived. When all had sat down and cups of tea had been handed round, the General explained at great length and very clearly the nature of the business.

Now gentlemen we must decide how we are to act against the rebels: must we take the offensive or the defensive? Each of these methods has its advantages and disadvantages. The offensive offers more hope of exterminating the enemy in the shortest time: the defensive is safer and more reliable. And so let us take votes in the proper manner: that is beginning with the youngest in rank. Ensign! he continued addressing himself to me: please give us your opinion.

I got up and began by saying a few words about Pugachov and his gang. I said positively that the impostor had no means of resisting regular troops.

My opinion was received by the officials with obvious disfavor. They saw in it the defiance and rashness of youth. There was a murmur and I clearly heard the word greenhorn uttered by someone in an under tone.

The General turned to me and said with a smile: Ensign, the first votes in councils of war are generally in favor of the offensive this is as it should be Now let us go on collecting votes Mr Collegiate Councilor! tell us your opinion

The little old man in the brocade coat hastily finished his third cup of tea considerably diluted with rum, and said in answer to the General

I think, your Excellency we need not take either the offensive or the defensive

How so sir? the General retorted in surprise No other tactics are possible one must either take the offensive or be on the defensive

Your Excellency take the way of bribery

Hal hal hal Your suggestion is very reasonable Bribery is permitted by military tactics and we will follow your advice We can offer seventy rubles or, perhaps, a hundred for the rascal's head to be paid from the secret fund

And then the chief customs officer interrupted may I be a Kirghiz sheep and not a collegiate councilor if those thieves do not surrender their leader to us bound hand and foot!

We will think of it again and talk it over the General answered but we must in any case take military measures Gentlemen please vote in the usual manner!

All the opinions were opposed to mine All the officials spoke of troops being unreliable and luck changeable of caution and such like things All thought it wiser to remain behind strong stone walls defended by cannon rather than venture into the open field At last, when the General had heard all the opinions he shook the ashes out of his pipe and made the following speech

My dear sirs! I must tell you that for my part I entirely agree with the Ensign's opinion for it is based upon all the rules of sound military tactics, according to which it is almost always preferable to take up the offensive rather than to remain on the defensive

At this point he stopped and began filling his pipe once more. My vanity was gratified. I proudly looked at the officials who whispered to one another with an air of vexation and anxiety.

Put my dear sirs, he continued letting out together with a deep sigh a big whiff of tobacco smoke. I dare not take upon myself so great a responsibility when the security of provinces entrusted to me by Her Imperial Majesty our gracious sovereign is at stake. And so I agree with the majority which has decided that it is wiser and safer to await a siege within the city walls, repulsing the enemy's attacks by artillery and if possible by sallies.

The officials in their turn looked mockingly at me. The council dispersed. I could not help regretting the weakness of the venerable soldier who decided against his own conviction to follow the opinion of ignorant and inexperienced men.

Several days after this famous council we learned that Pugachov true to his promise was approaching Orenburg. From the top of the town hall I saw the rebels' army. It seemed to me their numbers had increased tenfold since the last attack which I witnessed. They now had artillery brought by Pugachov from the small fortresses he had taken. Recalling the council's decision I foresaw a prolonged confinement within the town walls and nearly wept with vexation.

I will not describe the siege of Orenburg which belongs to history and is not a subject for family memoirs. I will only say that owing to the carelessness of the local authorities the siege was disastrous for the inhabitants who suffered famine and all sort of calamities. One may well imagine that life in Orenburg was simply unendurable. All were despondently waiting for their fate to be decided all complained of the prices which were indeed exorbitant. The inhabitants had grown used to cannon balls falling into their back yards even Pugachov's assaults no longer excited general interest. I was dying of boredom. Time was passing. I received no letter from the Belogorsky fortress. All the roads were cut off. Separation from Marya Ivanovna was growing unbearable. Uncertainty about her fate tormented me. The skirmishes were my only distractions. Thanks to Pugachov I had a good horse with which I shared my scanty fare and I rode it every day to exchange shots with Pugachov's men. As a rule the advantage in these skirmishes was on the side of the villains who were well fed, had plenty to drink and rode good horses. The starving cavalry of the town could not get the better of them. Sometimes our hungry infantry also went afield but the thick snow prevented it from acting successfully against the horsemen scattered all over the plain. Artillery thundered in vain from the top of the rampart and in the field it stuck in the snow and could not move because the horses were too exhausted to pull it along. This is what our military operations were like! And this was what the Orenburg officials called being cautious and sensible.

One day when we succeeded in scattering and driving away a rather thick crowd I overtook a Cossack who had lagged behind. I was on the point of striking him with my Turkish sword when he suddenly took off his cap and cried

Good morning Pyotr Andreyich! How are you getting on?

I looked at him and recognized our Cossack sergeant. I was overjoyed to see him.

How do you do Maximych I said to him. Have you been in the Belogorsky lately?

"Yes, sir I was there only yesterday I have a letter for you Pyotr Andreyich

Where is it? I asked flushing all over

Here said Maximych thrusting his hand in the breast of his coat I promised Palasha I would manage somehow to give it to you

He gave me a folded paper and galloped away I opened it and read with a tremor the following lines

It has pleased God to deprive me suddenly of both father and mother I have no friends or relatives in this world I appeal to you knowing that you have always wished me well and that you are ready to help every one I pray that this letter may reach you! Maximych has promised to take it to you Palasha has heard from Maximych that he often sees you from a distance during the sallies and that you do not take any care of yourself or think of those who pray for you with tears I was ill for a long time and when I recovered Alexey Ivanovich who is now commandant instead of my father forced Father Gerasim to give me up to him threatening him with Pugachov! I live in our house as a prisoner Alexey Ivanovich is forcing me to marry him He says he saved my life because he did not betray Akulina Pamsilovna when she told the villains I was her niece And I would rather die than marry a man like Alexey Ivanovich He treats me very cruelly and threatens that if I don't change my mind and marry him he will take me to the villains' camp and there the same thing will happen to me as to Lizaveta Kharlova I have asked Alexey Ivanovich to give me time to think He agreed to wait three more days and if I don't marry him in three days time he will have no pity on me Dear Pyotr Andreyich! You alone are my protector help me in my distress Persuade the

General and all the commanders to make haste and send a relief party to us and come yourself if you can I remain yours obediently

A poor orphan

Marya Mironov

I almost went out of my mind when I read this letter I galloped back to the town spurring my poor horse mercilessly On the way I racked my brain for the means of saving the poor girl but could think of nothing When I reached the town I rode straight to the General's and rushed headlong into his house

The General was walking up and down the room, smoking his pipe He stopped when he saw me He must have been struck by my appearance, he inquired with concern about the reason for my coming in such a hurry

Your Excellency I said to him I appeal to you as to my own father for God's sake don't refuse me the happiness of my whole life is at stake

What is it my dear? the old man asked in surprise What can I do for you? Tell me

Your Excellency allow me to have a detachment of soldiers and fifty Cossacks and let me go and clear the Belogorsky fortress

The General looked at me attentively probably thinking that I had gone out of my mind—he was not far wrong

How do you mean—to clear the Belogorsky fortress? he brought out at last

I vouch for success I said eagerly only let me go

No young man he said shaking his head at so great a distance the enemy will find it easy to cut off your communication with the main strategic point and to secure a complete victory over you Once the communication has been cut off

I was afraid he would enter upon a military discussion and made haste to interrupt him

Captain Mironov's daughter I said to him has sent me a letter she begs for help Shvabrin is forcing her to marry him

Really? Oh that Shvabrin is a great Schelm and if he falls into my hands I will have him court martialed within twenty four hours and we will shoot him on the fortress wall! But meanwhile you must have patience

Have patience! I cried beside myself But meanwhile he will marry Marya Ivanovna!

Oh that won't be so bad the General retorted it will be better for her to be Shvabrin's wife for the time being he will be able to look after her at present and afterwards when we shoot him she will find plenty of suitors God willing Charming widows don't remain old maids I mean a young widow will find a husband sooner than a girl would

I would rather die I cried in a rage than give her up to Shvabrin!

Oh I see! said the old man now I understand

You are evidently in love with Marya Ivanovna Oh that's another matter! Poor boy! But all the same I cannot possibly give you a detachment of soldiers and fifty Cossacks Such an expedition would be unreasonable I cannot take the responsibility for it

I bowed my head I was in despair Suddenly an idea flashed through my mind The reader will learn from the following chapter what it was—as the old fashioned novelists put it

XI

THE REBELS' CAMP

*The lion has just had a meal
 Ferocious as he is he asked me kindly What brings you to my lair?*

Sumarokov

I LEFT the General and hastened to my lodgings. Savelyich met me with his usual admonitions:

Why ever do you go fighting those drunken brigands, sir? It isn't the thing for a gentleman. You may perish for nothing any day. If at least they were Turks or Swedes—but these wretches are not fit to be mentioned.

I interrupted him by asking how much money we had.

We have enough, he said, with an air of satisfaction. The rascals rummaged everywhere, but I have managed to hide it from them. With these words he took out of his pocket a long knitted purse full of silver.

Well, Savelyich, said I to him, give me half of it and take the rest for yourself. I am going to the Belogorsky fortress.

My dear Pyotr Andreyich! said the kind old man in a shaking voice, what are you thinking of! How can you go at a time like this, when the brigands are all over the place? Have pity on your parents if you don't care about yourself. How can you go? What for? Wait a little, troops will come and catch the rascals, then go anywhere you like.

But my decision was firm.

It is too late to argue, I answered. I must go. I cannot help it. Don't grieve, Savelyich. God willing, we will meet again. Now don't be over scrupulous or stint yourself. Buy everything you need even if you have to pay three times the price. I make you a present of that money. If I don't return in three days

What, sir! Savelyich interrupted me. Do you imagine I would let you go alone? Don't you dream of asking that. Since you have decided to go, I will follow you. If I have to walk, I won't leave you. To think of my sitting behind a stone wall without you! I haven't taken leave of my senses yet. Say what you like, sir, but I will go with you.

I knew it was useless to argue with Savelyich and so I allowed him to prepare for the journey. Half an hour later I mounted my good horse and Savelyich a lame and skinny nag which one of the townspeople presented to him, not having the means to feed it. We rode to the town gates, the sentries let us pass, we left Orenburg.

It was growing dusk. My way lay through the village of Berda, which was occupied by Pugachov's troops. The main road was covered with snow-drifts, but traces of horses' hoofs were all over the steppe, marked afresh each day. I was riding at a quick trot. Savelyich could hardly follow me at a distance and kept shouting

Not so fast, sir, for God's sake, not so fast! My cursed nag cannot keep up with your long-legged devil. Where are you hurrying to? It's not to a feast we are going—more likely to our funeral! Pyotr Andreyich!

Pyotr Andreyich, my dear! Good Lord, that child will come to grief!

The lights of Berda soon came into sight. We rode up to the ravines that formed the natural defences of the village. Savelyich kept pace with me, never ceasing from his pitiful entreaties. I was hoping to get round the village when suddenly I saw before me in the twilight some five peasants armed with clubs it was the advance guard of Pugachov's camp. They called to us. Not knowing their password I wanted to ride past them without saying anything but they immediately surrounded me and one of them seized my horse by the bridle. I seized my sword and hit the peasant on the head his cap saved him but he staggered and let go the bridle. The others were confused and ran away. I took advantage of that moment spurred my horse and galloped on. The darkness of the approaching night might have saved me from all danger when turning round I suddenly saw that Savelyich was not with me. The poor old man could not ride away from the brigands on his lame horse. What was I to do? After waiting a few minutes and making certain that he had been detained I turned my horse back and went to his rescue.

As I rode up to the ravine I heard a noise shouts and my Savelyich's voice. I rode faster and soon found myself once more among the peasant watchmen who had stopped me a few minutes before. Savelyich was with them. They had pulled the old man off his nag and were preparing to bind him. My return pleased them. They rushed at me with a shout and instantly pulled me off my horse. One of them evidently the chief said that he would take us to the Czar at once.

And it is for the Father Czar to decide he added whether we are to hang you at once or wait till dawn.

I offered no resistance. Savelyich followed my example and the watchmen led us along in triumph.

We crossed the ravine and entered the village. Lights were burning in all the windows. Noise and shouting came from everywhere. We met a number of people in the streets but in the dark no one noticed us or recognized me for an officer from Orenburg. We were brought straight to a cottage that stood at the crossroads. There were several wine barrels and two cannon at the gate.

Here is the palace, one of the peasants said. I'll go and announce you.

He went in. I glanced at Savelyich, the old man was silently repeating a prayer and crossing himself. I waited a long time. At last the peasant returned and said to me:

Walk in, our Father says he will see the officer.

I went into the cottage or the palace as the peasants called it. It was lighted by two tallow candles and the walls were papered with gold paper, but the benches, the table, the washing arrangements, the towel on a nail, the oven fork in the corner and the broad stove shelf covered with pots, were just as in any other cottage. Pugachov, wearing a red coat and a tall cap, was sitting under the ikons with an air of importance, his arms akimbo. Several of his chief associates were standing by him with an expression of feigned servility. News of the arrival of an officer from Orenburg had evidently aroused the rebel curiosity and they had prepared an impressive reception for me. Pugachov recognized me at the first glance. His assumed air of importance suddenly disappeared.

Ah, your honor! he said genially. How are you? What brings you here?

I answered that I was traveling on my own business and that his men had detained me.

And what is your business? he asked me.

I did not know what to say. Thinking I did not want to speak before witnesses, Pugachov turned to his comrades and ordered them to leave the room. All obeyed except two who did no stir.

Speak boldly in their presence, Pugachov said to me. I hide nothing from them.

I threw a sidelong glance at the impostor's confidants.

One of them a puny bent old man with a gray beard had nothing remarkable about him except a blue ribbon worn across the shoulder over a gray peasant coat. But I shall never forget his comrade. He was tall stout and broad shouldered and seemed to be about forty five. A thick red beard gray glittering eyes a nose with out nostrils and reddish marks on the forehead and the cheeks gave an indescribable expression to his broad pock marked face. He wore a red shirt a Kirghiz gown and Cossack trousers. As I learned later the first was a runaway corporal, Beloborodov, the second Afanasy Sokolov nicknamed Khlopusha a convict who had escaped three times from the Siberian mines. In spite of the feelings which absorbed me the company in which I so unexpectedly found myself strongly appealed to my imagination. But Pugachov brought me back to myself by repeating Tell me on what business have you left Orenburg?

A strange idea came into my head it seemed to me that Providence which had brought me for the second time to Pugachov was giving me an opportunity to carry out my intention. I decided to take advantage of it and without stopping to consider my decision said in answer to Pugachov

I was going to the Belogorsky fortress to rescue an orphan who is being ill treated there.

Pugachov's eyes glittered.

Which of my men dares to ill treat an orphan? he cried. He may be as clever as you please but he won't escape my sentence. Tell me who is the guilty man?

Shvabrin I answered. He keeps under lock and key the girl whom you saw lying ill at the priest's house and wants to marry her by force.

I'll teach Shvabrin! said Pugachov menacingly.

I'll show him what it is to take the law into his own hands and to ill treat people. I will hang him!

Allow me to say a word Khlonusha said, in a hoarse voice. You were in a hurry to put Shvabrin in command of the fortress and now you are in a hurry to hang him. You have already offended the Cossacks by putting a gentleman over them. do not now frighten the gentry by hanging him at the first accusation.

One need not pity them nor show them favors! said the old man with the blue ribbon. There is no harm in hanging Shvabrin. but it wouldn't be amiss to question this officer thoroughly too. Why has he come here? If he doesn't recognize you as Czar he need not seek justice from you. and if he does acknowledge you why has he sat till to-day with your enemies in Orenburg? Won't you let me take him to the office and light a fire under his toes? It seems to me his honor has been sent to us by the Orenburg commanders.

The old villain's logic struck me as rather convincing. A shiver ran down my back when I thought in whose hands I was. Pugachov noticed my confusion.

Eh your honor? he said to me with a wink. I fancy my field marshal is talking sense. What do you think?

Pugachov's mockery gave me back my courage. I calmly answered that I was in his power and that he was free to do what he liked with me.

Good said Pugachov. and now tell me how are things going with you in the town?

Thank Heaven all is well. I answered.

All is well? Pugachov repeated. and people are dying of starvation? The Pretender was right. but in accordance with my duty I began assuring him that this was an empty rumor and that there were plenty of provisions in Orenburg.

You see the old man chimed in. he is deceiving you to your face. All refugees say with one voice that there is famine and pestilence in Orenburg. people eat carcasses and even that is a treat and his honor assures you they have plenty of everything. If you want to hang Shvabrin hang this fellow, too, on the same gallows so as to be fair to both!

The cursed old man's words seemed to have shaken Pugachov. Fortunately Khlopusha began contradicting his comrade.

Come Naumych, he said to him, you always want to be hanging and murdering. And you are not much of a man to look at—you can hardly keep body and soul together. You have one foot in the grave and yet you are destroying others. Isn't there enough blood on your conscience?

You are a fine saint! Beloborodov retorted. Why should you have pity?

Of course I too have things on my conscience, Khlopusha answered, and this hand (he clenched his bony fist and turning up his sleeve showed a hairy arm) has been guilty of shedding Christian blood. But I destroyed enemies, not guests, on a high road and in the dark forest and not at home behind the stove with a club and an axe and not with womanish slander.

The old man turned away and muttered. Torn nostrils.

What are you muttering, you old wretch? Khlopusha shouted. I'll give you torn nostrils! Wait a bit, your time will come too. God willing you too will sniff the hangman's pincers. And meanwhile take care I don't pull out your scurvy beard!

My Generals! Pugachov said pompously, that's enough quarreling! It does not matter if all the Orenburg pack wriggle under the same gallows, but it does matter if our dogs are at one another's throats. There make peace!

Khlopusha and Beloborodov did not say a word and looked at each other gloomily I saw that it was necessary to change the subject of a conversation which might end very badly for me and turning to Pugachov I said to him with a cheerful air

Oh I have forgotten to thank you for the horse and the sheepskin Had it not been for you I could not have found the road and should have been frozen on the way

My ruse succeeded Pugachov's good humor was restored

One good turn deserves another he said with a wink And tell me now why are you concerned about the girl whom Shvabrin is ill treating? Is she your sweetheart by any chance?

She is my betrothed! I answered seeing the favorable change in the weather and not thinking it necessary to conceal the truth

Your betrothed! Pugachov shouted Why didn't you say so before? Why we'll have you married and make merry at your wedding!

Then he turned to Beloborodov and said Listen, Field Marshal! His honor and I are old friends so let us sit down to supper Morning is wiser than evening we shall see to-morrow what we are to do with him

I should have been glad to refuse the honor but there was nothing for it Two young girls daughters of the Cossack to whom the hut belonged spread a white cloth on the table brought bread fish soup and several bottles of vodka and beer Once more I found myself at the same table with Pugachov and his terrible comrades

The orgy of which I was an involuntary witness lasted far into the night At last the company were overpowered with drink Pugachov dozed his friends got up and made me a sign to leave him I went with them out of the room At Akhlopusha's orders the watchman took me into the cottage that served as of fice I found Savelyich there and we were locked up together for the night. The old man was so amazed at all that was happening that he did not ask me a single question. He lay down in the dark and was a long time sighing and groaning at last he snored and I gave myself up to thoughts which did not give me a wink of sleep all night.

In the morning Pugachov sent for me. I went to him. A chaise drawn by three Tatar horses was standing at his gate. There was a crowd in the street. I met Pugachov in the entry he was dressed for the journey in a fur coat and a kuznetz cap. His comrades of the day before surrounded him with an air of servility which little accorded with all that I had seen the night before. Pugachov greeted me cheerfully and told me to step into the chaise with him. We took our seats.

To the Belogorsky fortress! Pugachov said to the broad shouldered Tatar who drove the troika standing

My heart beat violently. The horses set off the bell clanged the chaise flew along.

Stop! Stop! a familiar voice called out and I saw Savelyich running toward us. Pugachov told the driver to stop.

My dear Pyotr Andreyich! Savelyich cried "don't abandon me in my old age among these rascals!

Ah you old creature! Pugachov said to him. So God has brought us together again. Well climb on to the box!"

Thank you sire thank you our father! said Savelyich climbing up. May God let you live to be a hundred for your kindness to an old man. I will pray for you as long as I live and will never mention the hare skin jacket again.

This hare skin jacket might anger Pugachov in earnest at last. Fortunately he had not heard or took no notice of the inopportune remark. The horses set off at a gallop, the people in the street stopped and bowed. Pugachov nodded right and left. A minute later we left the village and flew along the smooth road.

One may well imagine what I was feeling at that moment. In a few hours I was to see her whom I had already considered as lost to me. I was picturing the moment of our meeting. I was also thinking of the man in whose hands I was and who was mysteriously connected with me through a strange combination of circumstances. I was recalling the thoughtless cruelty, the bloodthirsty habits of the would be rescuer of my beloved. Pugachov did not know that she was Captain Mironov's daughter. Shvabrin in his bitterness might tell him, or Pugachov might discover the truth in other ways. What would become of Marya Ivanovna then? A shiver ran down my back and my hair stood on end.

Suddenly Pugachov interrupted my reflections with a question. "What are you thinking of so deeply, your honor?"

"How can I help thinking?" I answered. "I am an officer and a gentleman, only yesterday I was fighting against you and today I am driving beside you and the happiness of my whole life depends upon you."

"Well, are you afraid?" Pugachov asked.

I answered that since he had spared me once, I was hoping he would do so again and would indeed help me.

"And you are right, upon my soul, you are right!" Pugachov said. "You saw that my men were looking askance at you, and the old man again insisted this morning that you were a spy and ought to be tortured and hanged, but I did not agree," he added, lowering his voice so that Savelyich and the Tatar should not hear him, "remembering your glass of vodka and the hareskin jacket You see I am not so bloodthirsty as your people make me out

I recalled the taking of the Belogorsky fortress but did not think it necessary to contradict him and did not answer

What do they say of me in Orenburg? Pugachov asked after a silence

They say it s not easy to get the better of you There s no denying it, you ve made your presence felt

The Pretender s face assumed an expression of satisfied vanity

Yes! he said cheerfully I am quite a hand at fighting Do they know at Orenburg about the battle a. Yuzeyeva? Forty g'nerals were killed four armies taken captive What do you think? would the Prussian king be a match for me?

The brigand s boasting amused me

What do you think yourself? I asked him could you beat Frederick?

Why not? I beat your generals and they used to beat him So far I have been lucky in war Wait, you ll see even better things when I march on Moscow

Are you thinking of doing that?

Pugachov pondered and said in a low voice

God only knows I am cramped I cannot do as I like My men are too independent They are thieves I have to keep a sharp look out at the first defeat they will ransom their necks with my head

That s just it! I said Hadn t you better leave them yourself in good time and appeal to the Emperor s mercy?

Pugachov smiled bitterly

No he said it is too late for me to repent There will be no mercy for me I will go on as I have begun.

Who knows? I may succeed after all! Grishka Otrepyev did reign over Moscow you know

And do you know what his end was? They threw him out of the window killed him burned his body and fired a cannon with his ashes

Listen Pugachov said with a kind of wild inspiration I will tell you a fairy tale which in my childhood an old Kalmuck woman told me The eagle asked the raven one day Tell me raven bird why do you live in the world for three hundred years and I only for thirty three? — Because rather-eagle you drink living blood the raven said and I feed on things that are dead The eagle thought I will try and feed as he does Very well The eagle and the raven flew along They saw the carcass of a horse came down and perched on it The raven plucked and praised the food The eagle took a peck or two then waved his wing and said No brother raven rather than feed on carrion flesh for three hundred years I would have one drink of living blood—and leave the rest to God! What do you think of the Kalmuck tale?

It is clever I answered But to live by murder and brigandage is to my mind just pecking carrion

Pugachov looked at me with surprise and made no answer We both sank into silence each absorbed in his own reflections The Tatar struck up a doleful song Savelyich dozed as he sat rocking to and fro on the box The chaise flew along the smooth winter road

Suddenly I saw on the steep bank of the Yaik a village with a palisade round it and a belfry rising above it—and in another quarter of an hour we drove into the Belogorsky fortress

AN ORPHAN

A Wedding Song

THE chaise drove up to the Commandant's house. The people recognized the sound of Pugachov's bell and ran after us in a crowd. Shvabrin met the Pretender on the step. He was dressed like a Cossack and had grown a beard. The traitor helped Pugachov to step out of the chaise speaking in servile expressions of his delight and devotion. He was confused when he saw me but soon recovered and gave me his hand saying

So you too are one of us? Time you were!

I turned away and made no answer.

My heart ached when we came into the familiar room the certificate of the late Commandant still hung on the wall as a sad epitaph of bygone days. Pugachov sat down on the sofa where Ivan Kurmich used to doze lulled to sleep by his wife's grumbling. Shvabrin brought him some vodka. Pugachov drank a glass and said pointing to me

Offer some to his honor too.

Shvabrin came up to me with the tray but I turned away again. He was obviously very uneasy. With his usual quickness he guessed of course that Pugachov was displeased with him. He was afraid and looked at me with distrust Pugachov asked about the state of the fortress the news of the enemy's troops and such like things and suddenly asked him

Tell me brother who is the girl you are keeping prisoner in your house? Show her to me

Shvabrin turned white as death

Sire he said in a shaking voice Sire she is not a prisoner She is ill she is upstairs in bed

Take me to her the Pretender said getting up

It was impossible to refuse him Shvabrin led Pugachov to Marya Ivanovna's room I followed them

Shvabrin stopped on the stairs

Sire he said you may require of me whatever you wish but do not allow a stranger to enter my wife's bedroom

I shuddered

So you are married? I said to Shvabrin ready to tear him to pieces

Keep quiet! Pugachov interrupted me It is my affair And don't you try to be clever he went on addressing Shvabrin or invent excuses wife or not I take to her whomsoever I like Follow me your honor

At Marya Ivanovna's door Shvabrin stopped again and said in a breaking voice

Sire, I warn you she has brain fever and has been raving for the last three days

Open the door! said Pugachov

Shvabrin began searching in his pockets and said he had not brought the key Pugachov pushed the door with his foot the lock fell off the door opened and we went in

I looked—and was aghast Marya Ivanovna pale and thin with disheveled hair and dressed like a peasant was sitting on the floor a jug of water covered with a piece of bread stood before her When she saw me she started and cried out What I felt then I cannot describe

Pugachov looked at Shvabrin and said, with a bitter smile

Fine hospital you have here! Then he went up to Marya Ivanovna and said Tell me my dear what is your husband punishing you for? What wrong have you done to him?

My husband! she repeated he is not my husband I will never be his wife I would rather die, and I shall die if I am not saved from him

Pugachov looked menacingly at Shvabrin

And you dared to deceive me! he said Do you know what you deserve you wretch?

Shvabrin dropped on his knees At that moment a feeling of contempt outweighed my hatred and anger I looked with disgust upon a gentleman groveling at the feet of an escaped convict Pugachov was softened

I will spare you this time, he said to Shvabrin but next time you are at fault this wrong will be remembered against you

Then he turned to Marya Ivanovna and said kindly Come away, my pretty maid I set you free I am the Czar!

Marya Ivanovna glanced at him and understood that her parents' murderer was before her She buried her face in her hands and fell down senseless I rushed to her but at that moment my old friend Palasha very boldly made her way into the room and began attending to her mistress Pugachov walked out and the three of us went downstairs

Well your honor Pugachov said laughing we've delivered the fair maiden! What do you think hadn't we better send for the priest and tell him to marry you to his niece? I'll give her away if you like, and Shvabrin will be best man—we'll make merry and drink, and give the guests no time to think!

The very thing that I feared happened. Shvabrin was beside himself when he heard Pugachov's suggestion.

Sire! he cried in a frenzy. I am to blame. I have lied to you, but Grinyov too is deceiving you. This girl is not the priest's niece—she is the daughter of Captain Mironov who was hanged when the fortress was taken.

Pugachov fixed on me his fiery eye.

What's this? he asked in perplexity.

Shvabrin is right. I answered firmly.

You hadn't told me, remarked Pugachov, and his face clouded.

But consider, I answered him. How could I have said in your men's presence that Mironov's daughter was living? They would have torn her to pieces. Nothing would have saved her!

That's true enough. Pugachov said laughing. My drunkards would not have spared the poor girl. The priest's wife did well to deceive them.

Listen. I said, seeing that he was in a kind mood. I do not know what to call you and I don't want to know. But God knows I would gladly pay you with my life for what you have done for me. Only don't ask of me what is against my honor and Christian conscience. You are my benefactor. Finish as you have begun. Let me go with the poor orphan whither God may lead us. And whatever happens to you and wherever you may be, we shall pray to Him every day of our lives to save your sinful soul.

It seemed that Pugachov's stern heart was touched.

So be it! he said. I don't believe in stopping half way be it in vengeance or in mercy Take your sweet heart, go with her where you will and God grant you love and concord!

Then he turned to Shvabrin and told him to give me a pass through all the villages and fortresses subject to his rule

Shvabrin, utterly overwhelmed, stood like one dumbfounded Pugachov went to look at the fortress Shvabrin accompanied him and I remained behind under the pretext of making ready for the journey

I ran upstairs The door was locked I knocked

Who is there? Palasha asked

I gave my name Marya Ivanovna's sweet voice came from behind the door

Wait a little Pyotr Andreyich, I am changing my dress Go to Akulina Parnilovna's I shall be there directly "

I obeyed and went to Father Gerasim's house Both he and his wife ran out to meet me Savelyich had already given them the news

How do you do Pyotr Andreyich? the priest's wife said God has brought us together again! How are you? We have talked of you every day Marya Ivanovna has been through a dreadful time without you poor darling! But tell me my dear how did you hit it off with Pugachov? How is it he hasn't made an end of you? It's something to the villain's credit!

That will do my dear, Father Gerasim interrupted her Don't blurt out all you know There is no salvation in speaking overmuch Please come in Pyotr Andreyich! You are very welcome We haven't seen you for months!

The priest's wife offered me what food there was and talked incessantly as she did so She told me how Shvabrin had forced them to give up Marya Ivanovna how Marya Ivanovna wept and did not want to part from them how Marya Ivanovna always kept in touch with her through Palasha (a spirited girl who made the sergeant himself dance to her tune) how she had advised Marya Ivanovna to write a letter to me and so on I in my turn briefly told her my story. The priest and his wife crossed them elves when they heard that Pugachov knew of their deception.

The power of the Holy Cross be with us! said Akulina Pamfilovna. May the Lord let the storm go by! Fancy Alexey Ivanich betraying us! He is a fine one!

At that moment the door opened and Marya Ivanovna came in a smile on her pale face. She had laid aside peasant clothes and was dressed as before simply and prettily.

I clasped her hand and for some moments could not utter a word. Our hearts were too full for speech. Our hosts felt that we had no thoughts to spare for them and left us. We were alone. All was forgotten. We talked and talked. Marya Ivanovna told me all that had happened to her after the fortress was taken, she described to me the horror of her position and all that she had had to endure at the hands of her vile pursuer. We recalled the bygone happy days. We were both weeping. At last I put my plans before her. It was impossible for her to stay in a fortress subject to Pugachov and ruled by Shvabrin. It was no use thinking of Orenburg where the inhabitants were suffering all the horrors of the siege. She had no one belonging to her in the world. I offered her to go to my parents' estate. She hesitated at first, she knew my father's animosity toward her and was afraid. I reassured her. I knew that my father would be happy and consider it his duty to welcome the daughter of a veteran who had died for his country.

Darling Marya Ivanovna, I said to her at last "I look upon you as my wife. Miraculous circumstances have united us for ever: nothing in the world can part us.

Marya Ivanovna listened to me without coyness or feigned reluctance. She felt that her fate was united to mine. But she repeated that she would only marry me with my parents' consent. I did not contradict her about it. We kissed each other sincerely and ardently—and all was settled between us.

An hour later Maximych brought me a pass signed with Pugachov's hieroglyphics and said that he wanted to see me. I found him ready for the journey. I cannot express what I felt on parting from this terrible man, a monster of evil to all but me. Why not confess the truth? At that moment I was drawn to him by warm sympathy. I longed to tear him away from the criminals whose leader he was and to save his head before it was too late. Shvabrin and the people who crowded round us prevented me from saying all that was in my heart.

We parted friends. Seeing Akulina Pamfilovna in the crowd, Pugachov shook his finger at her and winked significantly; then he stepped into the chaise, told the driver to go to Berda, and as the horses moved he put out his head from the chaise once more and shouted to me:

Good-bye, your honor! We may yet meet again.

We did meet again—but under what circumstances!

Pugachov drove away. I gazed for some time at the white steppe where his troika was galloping. The crowd dispersed. Shvabrin disappeared. I returned to the priest's house. Everything was ready for our departure. I did not want to delay any longer. All our belongings were packed in the old Commandant's carriage. The drivers harnessed the horses in a trice. Marya Ivanovna went to say good-bye to the graves of her parents, who were buried behind the church. I wanted to accompany her but she asked me to let her go alone. She returned in a few minutes, silently weeping quiet tears. The carriage was brought before the house. Father Gerasim and his wife came out on to the steps. The three of us—Marya Ivanovna, Palasha, and I—sat inside the carriage and Savelych climbed on the box.

"Good-bye, Marya Ivanovna, my darling! Good-bye, Pyotr Andreyich, our brave falcon!" Lind Akulina Parnilovna said to us. "A happy journey to you, and God grant you happiness!"

We set off. I saw Shvabrin standing at the window of the Commandant's house. His face was expressive of gloomy malice. I did not want to triumph over a defeated enemy and turned my eyes in another direction. At last we drove out of the fortress gates, and left the Belogorsky fortress for ever.

THE ARREST

*"Do not be angry, to-morrow bids me

You will first allow me to have my say*

Krivazhina

UNITED so unexpectedly to the sweet girl about whom I had been terribly anxious only that morning I could not believe my senses and fancied that all that had happened to me was an empty dream. Marva Ivanovna gazed thoughtfully now at me and now at the road she did not seem to have come to herself as yet. We were silent. Our hearts were much too tired. We did not notice how in a couple of hours we found our selves at the neighboring fortress which also was in Pugachov's hands. We changed horses there. The quickness with which they were harness'd and the hurried servility of the bearded Cossack promoted by Pugachov to the post of Commandant proved that owing to our driver's talkativeness I was being taken for the Czar's favorite.

We continued our journey. Dusk was falling. We drew near a small town occupied according to the bearded Commandant by a strong detachment of Pugachov's supporters on their way to join him. We were stopped by the sentries. To the question "Who goes there?" the driver answered in a loud voice "The Czar's friend with his lady." Suddenly a crowd of Hussars surrounded us, swearing fearfully.

"Come out, you devil's friend!" a sergeant with a big mustache said to me. "You will get it hot presently and that girl of yours too."

I stepped out of the chaise and demanded to be taken to the commanding officer. Seeing my uniform the soldiers stopped swearing. The sergeant led me to the major. Savelyich went with me, muttering to himself "There's a fine Czar's friend for you! Out of the frying pan into the fire." "Good Lord, what will the end of it be?" The chaise followed us at a walking pace. After five minutes' walk we came to a brilliantly lighted house. The sergeant left me with the sentries and went to announce me. He returned at once saying the major had not time to see me but that he ordered that I should be taken to jail and my lady brought to him.

"What's the meaning of this?" I cried in a rage. "Has he gone off his head?"

"I cannot tell your honor," the sergeant answered

"Only his honor said that your honor was to be taken to jail and her honor brought to his honor."

I rushed up the steps. The sentries made no attempt to detain me and I ran straight into the room where six officers of the Hussars were playing cards. The major was dealing. Imagine my surprise when I recognized him for Ivan Ivanovich Zurin who had won from me at billiards at the Simbirsk inn!

"Is it possible?" I cried. "Ivan Ivanych! Is that you?"

"Why, Pyotr Andreyich! What wind brings you? Where do you come from? Glad to see you, brother. Won't you join the game?"

"Thanks. Better tell them to give me a lodging."

"What lodging? Stay with me."

"I cannot. I am not alone."

"Well, bring your comrade along."

"It's not a comrade. I am with a lady."

"A lady! Where did you pick her up? Oho, brother! At these words Zurin whistled so expressively that everyone laughed. I was utterly confused."

"Well," Zurin went on, "so be it! You shall have a lodging, but it's a pity. We could have had a gay time as in the old days. Hey, boy! Why don't they bring along Pugachov's sweetheart? Doesn't she want to come? Tell her she need not fear: the gentleman is very kind and will do her no harm—and give her a good kick to hurry her up."

"What are you talking about?" I said to Zurin. "Pugachov's sweetheart? It is the late Captain Mironov's daughter. I have rescued her and am now seeing her off to my father's estate where I shall leave her."

"What! So it was you they have just announced? Upon my word! What does it all mean?"

"I will tell you afterward. And now for Heaven's sake reassure the poor girl whom your Hussars have frightened."

Zurin made arrangements at once. He came out into the street to apologize to Marya Ivanovna for the mis- understanding and told the sergeant to give her the best lodging in the town. I was to spend the night with him.

We had supper and when we were left alone I told him my adventures. Zurin listened with great attention. When I had finished he shook his head and said:

That's all very good, brother, one thing only is not good—why the devil do you want to be married? I am an honest officer. I would not deceive you: believe me, marriage is a delusion. You don't want to be bothered with a wife and be nursing babies! Throw it up! Do as I tell you—get rid of the Captain's daughter. The road to Simbirsk is safe now. I have cleared it. Send her to-morrow to your parents by herself and you stay in my detachment. There is no need for you to return to Orenburg. If you fall into the rebels' hands once more you may not escape this time. And so the love foolishness will pass of itself and all will be well.

I did not altogether agree with him, but I felt that I was in duty bound to remain with the army. I decided to follow Zurin's advice and send Marya Ivanovna to the country while I remained in his detachment.

Savelyich came to undress me, I told him that he must be ready next day to continue the journey with Marya Ivanovna. He did not want to at first.

What are you thinking of, sir? How can I leave you? Who will look after you? What will your parents say?

Knowing Savelyich's obstinacy I decided to win him by affection and sincerity.

Arhip Savelyich, my dear! I said to him. Don't refuse. You will be doing me a great kindness. I shall not need a servant, but I shall have no peace if Marya Ivanovna goes on her journey without you. In serving her you will be serving me because I am determined to marry her as soon as circumstances allow

Savelyich clasped his hands¹ with an air of indescribable amazement

To marry! he replied The child thinks of marrying! But what will your father say what will your mother think?

They will agree I am sure they will agree when they know Marya Ivanovna I answered I rely on you too My father and mother trust you you will intercede for us won't you?

Savelyich was touched

Ah Pyotr Andreyich dear he answered though it is much too early for you to think of marrying Marya Ivanovna is such a good young lady that it would be a sin to miss the opportunity Have it your own way! I shall go with her angel that she is and will tell your parents faithfully that such a bride does not need a dowry

I thanked Savelyich and went to bed in the same room with Zurin My mind was in a turmoil and I talked and talked At first Zurin answered me readily but gradually his words became few and disconnected at last in answer to a question he gave a snore with a whistle in it I stopped talking and soon followed his example

Next morning I went to Marya Ivanovna and told her of my plans She recognized their reasonableness and agreed with me at once Zurin's detachment was to leave the town that same day There was no time to be lost I said good bye to Marya Ivanovna there and then entrusting her to Savelyich and giving her a letter to my parents Marya Ivanovna wept

Good-bye, Pyotr Andreyich she said in a low

See footnot on p. 608

voice God only knows whether we shall meet again but I will not forget you as long as I live, till death you alone shall remain in my heart

I could not answer her Other people were there I did not want to abandon myself in their presence to the feelings that agitated me At last she drove away I returned to Zurin sad and silent He wanted to cheer me I sought distraction we spent the day in riotous gaiety and set out on the march in the evening

It was the end of February The winter which had made military operations difficult was coming to an end and our generals were preparing for concerted action Pugachov was still besieging Orenburg Meanwhile the army detachments around him were joining forces and approaching the brigands nest from all sides Rebellious villages were restored to order at the sight of the soldiers brigand bands dispersed on our approach and everything indicated a speedy and successful end of the war

Soon Prince Golitzyn defeated Pugachov at the Tatisheheva fortress scattered his hordes delivered Orenburg and dealt it seemed the last and decisive blow to the rebellion Zurin was at that time sent against a gang of rebellious Bashkirs who had dispersed before we caught sight of them Spring found us in a Tatar village Rivers were in flood and roads impassable We could do nothing but comforted ourselves with the thought that the petty and tedious war with brigands and savages would soon be over

Pugachov was not caught however He appeared at the Siberian foundries collected there fresh bands of followers and began his evil work once more Again rumors of his success spread abroad We heard of the fall of the Siberian fortresses Soon afterward, the army leaders who slumbered carefree in the hope that the contemptible rebel was powerless were alarmed by the news of his taking Kazan and advancing toward Moscow Zurin received an order to cross the Volga

I will not describe our campaign and the end of the war I shall say briefly that there was extreme misery There was no lawful authority anywhere The land owners were hiding in the forests Bands of brigands were ransacking the country The chiefs of separate detachments arbitrarily meted out punishments and granted pardons the vast region where the conflagration had raged was in a terrible state God save us from seeing a Russian revolt senseless and merciless!

Pugachov was in retreat, pursued by Ivan Ivanovich Michelson Soon after we learned that he was utterly defeated At last Zurin heard that he had been captured and at the same time received an order to halt The war was over! I could go to my parents at last! The thought of embracing them and of seeing Marya Ivanovna of whom I had had no news delighted me I danced with joy like a child Zurin laughed and said shrugging his shoulders, No you'll come to a bad end! You will be married and done for!

And yet a strange feeling poisoned my joy I could not help being troubled at the thought of the villain smeared with the blood of so many innocent victims and now awaiting his punishment Why didn't he fall on a bayonet? or get hit with a cannon ball? I thought with vexation He could not have done any thing better What will you have? I could not think of Pugachov without remembering how he had spared me at one of the awful moments of my life and saved my betrothed from the vile Shvabrin's hands

Zurin gave me leave of absence In a few days I was to be once more with my family and see my Marya Ivanovna Suddenly an unexpected storm burst upon me

On the day of my departure at the very minute when I was to go Zurin came into my room with a paper in his hand looking very much troubled My heart sank I was frightened without knowing why He sent out my orderly and said he had something to tell me

What is it? I asked anxiously

Something rather unpleasant, he answered giving me the paper Read what I have just received

I began reading it it was a secret order to all commanding officers to arrest me wherever they might find me and to send me at once under escort to Kazan to the Commission of Inquiry into the Pugachov rising

The paper almost dropped out of my hands

There is nothing for it Zurin said my duty is to obey the order Probably the news of your friendly journeys with Pugachov has reached the authorities I hope it will not have any consequences and that you will clear yourself before the Committee Go and don't be down hearted

My conscience was clear I was not afraid of the trial but the thought of putting off, perhaps for several months the sweet moment of reunion terrified me The carriage was ready Zurin bade me a friendly good bye I stepped into the carriage Two Hussars with bare swords sat down beside me and we drove along the high road

THE TRIAL

Popular rumor is like a sea wave

A Proverb

I WAS certain it was all due to my leaving Orenburg without permission. I could easily justify myself: sal-lying out against the enemy had never been prohibited and was indeed encouraged in every way. I might be accused of too great rashness, but not of disobedience. My friendly relations with Pugachov, however, could be proved by a number of witnesses and must have seemed highly suspicious to say the least of it. Throughout the journey I kept thinking of the questions I might be asked and pondering my answers. I decided to tell the plain truth at the trial, believing that this was the simplest and at the same time the most certain way of justifying myself.

I arrived at Kazan. It had been devastated and burnt down. Instead of houses there were heaps of cinders in the streets and remnants of charred walls without roofs or windows. Such was the trail left by Pugachov! I was brought to the fortress that had remained intact in the midst of the burnt city. The Hussars passed me on to the officer in charge. He called for the blacksmith. Shackles were put on my feet and soldered together. Then I was taken to the prison and left alone in the dark and narrow cell with bare walls and a window with iron bars.

Such a beginning boded nothing good. I did not, however, lose either hope or courage. I had recourse to the comfort of all the sorrowful and, having tasted for the first time the sweetness of prayer, poured out from a pure but bleeding heart, dropped calmly asleep without caring what would happen to me

The next morning the warder woke me up, saying I was wanted by the Commission Two soldiers took me across the yard to the Commandant's house they stopped in the entry and let me go into the inner room by myself

I walked into a rather large room Two men were sitting at a table covered with papers an elderly general who looked cold and forbidding and a young captain of the Guards a good looking man of about twenty eight with a pleasant and easy manner A secretary with a pen behind his ear sat at a separate table bending over the paper in readiness to write down my answers The examination began I was asked my name and rank The General asked whether I was the son of Andrey Petrovich Grinyov When I said I was he remarked severely

It is a pity that so estimable a man has such an unworthy son!

I calmly answered that whatever the accusation against me might be I hoped to clear myself by candidly telling the truth The General did not like my confidence

You are sharp brother he said to me frowning but we have seen cleverer ones than you!

Then the young man asked me

On what occasion and at what time did you enter Pugachov's service and on what commissions did he employ you?

I answered with indignation that as an officer and a gentleman I could not possibly have entered Pugachov's service or have carried out any commissions of his

"How was it then my questioner continued that an officer and a gentleman was alone spared by the Pretender while all his comrades were villainously murdered? How was it that this same officer and gentleman feasted with the rebels as their friend and accepted presents from the villain—a sheepskin coat a horse and fifty kopecks in money? How had such strange friendship arisen and what could it be based upon except treason or at any rate upon base and vile cowardice?

I was deeply offended by the officer's words and warmly began my defence. I told them how I had first met Pugachov in the steppe in the snowstorm and how he recognized and spared me at the taking of the Belogorsky fortress. I admitted that I had not scrupled to accept from the Pretender the horse and the sheepskin coat but said that I had defended the Belogorsky fortress against him to the last extremity. At last I referred them to my General who could testify to my zealous service during the perilous Orenburg siege.

The stern old man took an unsealed letter from the table and began reading it aloud.

With regard to Your Excellency's inquiry concerning Ensign Grinyov said to be involved in the present insurrection and to have had relations with the villain contrary to the military law and to our oath of allegiance I have the honor to report as follows. The said Ensign Grinyov served at Orenburg from the beginning of October 1773 to 4 February 1774 upon which date he left the city and returned no more to serve under my command. I have heard from refugees that he had been in Pugachov's camp and went with him to the Belogorsky fortress where he had served before as to his conduct I can

At this point he interrupted his reading and said to me sternly. What can you say for yourself now?

I wanted to go on as I had begun and to explain my connection with Marya Ivanovna as candidly as all the rest but I suddenly felt an overwhelming repulsion. It occurred to me that if I mentioned her she would be summoned by the Commission, and I was so overcome at the awful thought of connecting her name with the vile slanders of the villains, and of her being confronted with them that I became confused and hesitated.

My judges who seemed to have been listening to me with favor were once more prejudiced against me by my confusion. The officer of the Guards asked that I should be faced with the chief informer. The General gave word that yesterday's villain should be brought in. I turned to the door with interest waiting for the appearance of my accuser. A few minutes later there was a rattle of chains the door opened and Shvabrin walked in. I was surprised at the change in him. He was terribly pale and thin. His hair that had a short time ago been black as pitch was now white his long beard was unkempt. He repeated his accusations in a weak but confident voice. According to him I had been sent by Pugachov to Orenburg as a spy under the pretext of sallies. I had come out every day to give him written news of all that was happening in the town at last I had openly joined the Pretender had driven with him from fortress to fortress doing my utmost to ruin my fellow traitors so as to occupy their posts and had taken presents from the Pretender. I heard him out in silence and was pleased with one thing only. Marya Ivanovna's name had not been uttered by the base villain either because his vanity suffered at the thought of one who had scorned him or because there lingered in his heart a spark of the same feeling which made me keep silent about her. In any case the name of the Belogorsky Commandant's daughter was not mentioned before the Commission I was more determined than ever not to bring it up and when the judges asked me how I could disprove Shvabrin's accusations I answered that I adhered to my original explanation and had nothing more to say in my defence. The General gave word for us to be led away. We went out together. I calmly looked at Shvabrin but did not say a word to him. He gave a malignant smile and lifting his chains quickened his pace and left me behind. I was taken back to prison and not called for examination any more.

I have not witnessed the subsequent events of which I must inform the reader but I had them told me so often that the least details are engraved on my memory and I feel as though I had been invisibly present.

Marya Ivanovna had been received by my parents with that sincere cordiality which distinguished people in former days. They held it to be a blessing that they had been afforded the opportunity of sheltering and comforting the poor orphan. They soon became truly attached to her for it was impossible to know her and not to love her. My love for her no longer seemed to my father a mere whim and my mother had but one wish—that her Petrusha should marry that dear creature the Captain's daughter.

The news of my arrest was a shock to my family. Marya Ivanovna had told my parents of my strange acquaintance with Pugachov so simply that so far from being troubled about it they often laughed at it with whole-hearted amusement. My father refused to believe that I could have been implicated in vile rebellion the aim of which was to overthrow the throne and exterminate the gentry. He closely questioned Savelyich. The old man did not conceal the fact that I had been to see Pugachov and that the villain had been kind to me but he swore that he had not heard of any treason. My parents were reassured and waited impatiently for favorable news. Marya Ivanovna was very much alarmed but said nothing for she was extremely modest and prudent.

Several weeks passed. Suddenly my father received a letter from our relative in Petersburg, Prince B. The Prince wrote about me. After beginning in the usual way he went on to say that, unfortunately the suspicions about my complicity in the rebels' designs proved to be only too true and that I should have been put to death as an example to others had not the Empress, in consideration of my father's merits and advanced age, decided to spare the criminal son and commuted the shameful death penalty to a mere exile for life to a remote part of Siberia.

This unexpected blow very nearly killed my father. He lost his habitual self-control and his grief, usually silent, found expression in bitter complaints.

What! he repeated beside himself. My son is an accomplice of Pugachov's! Merciful heavens, what have I lived to see! The Empress reprieves him! Does that make it any better for me? It's not the death penalty that is terrible. My great grandfather died on the scaffold for what was to him a matter of conscience; my father suffered together with Volynsky and Khrushchov.¹ But for a gentleman to betray his oath of allegiance and join brigands, murderers and run away serfs! Shame and disgrace to our name!

Terrified by his despair, my mother did not dare to weep in his presence and tried to cheer him by talking of the uncertainty of rumor and the small faith to be attached to people's opinions. My father was inconsolable.

Marya Ivanovna suffered most. She was certain that I could have cleared myself if I had chosen to do so and guessing the truth considered herself the cause of my misfortune. She concealed her tears and sorrow from everyone but was continually thinking of the means to save me.

One evening my father was sitting on the sofa turning over the leaves of the Court Calendar but his thoughts were far away and the reading did not have its usual effect upon him. He was whistling an old march. My mother was knitting a woolen coat in silence and now and again a tear dropped on her work. Suddenly Marya Ivanovna who sat by her doing needlework said that it was necessary for her to go to Petersburg and asked for the means of traveling there. My mother was very much grieved.

What do you want in Petersburg? she said. Can it be that you too want to leave us Marya Ivanovna?

Marya Ivanovna answered that her whole future depended upon this journey and that she was going to seek the help and protection of influential people as the daughter of a man who had suffered for his loyalty.

My father bent his head every word that reminded him of his son's alleged crime pained him and seemed to him a bitter reproach.

Go my dear he said to her with a sigh. We don't want to stand in the way of your happiness. God grant you may have a good man for a husband and not a disgraced traitor.

He got up and walked out of the room.

Left alone with my mother Marya Ivanovna partly explained her plan to her. My mother embraced her with tears and prayed for the success of her undertaking. Marya Ivanovna was made ready for the journey and a few days later she set off with the faithful

Palasha and the faithful Savelyich who in his enforced parting from me comforted himself with the thought that at least he was serving my betrothed

Marya Ivanovna safely arrived at Sofia and, hearing that the Court was at Czarkoe Selo, decided to stop there. At the posting station, a tiny recess behind the partition was assigned to her. The station master's wife immediately got into conversation with her, said that she was the niece of the man who tended the stoves at the Palace, and initiated her into the mysteries of Court life. She told her at what time the Empress woke up in the morning, took coffee, went for walks, what courtiers were with her at the time, what she had said at dinner the day before, whom she had received in the evening. In short, Anna Vlasyevna's conversation was as good as several pages of historical memoirs and would have been precious for posterity. Marya Ivanovna listened to her attentively. They went into the gardens. Anna Vlasyevna told the history of every avenue and every bridge and they returned to the station after a long walk, much pleased with each other.

Marya Ivanovna woke up early the next morning, dressed, and slipped out into the gardens. It was a beautiful morning; the sun was lighting the tops of the lime trees that had already turned yellow under the fresh breath of autumn. The broad lake, without a ripple on it, glittered in the sunlight. The stately swans just awake came sailing out from under the bushes that covered the banks. Marya Ivanovna walked along a beautiful meadow where a monument had just been put up in honor of Count Rumyantzev's recent victories. Suddenly a little white dog of English breed ran toward her, barking. Marya Ivanovna was frightened and stood still. At that moment she heard a woman's pleasant voice:

Don't be afraid, he won't bite.

And Marya Ivanovna saw a lady sitting on a bench opposite the monument. Marya Ivanovna sat down at the other end of the bench. The lady was looking at her attentively. Marya Ivanovna in her turn cast several sidelong glances at her and succeeded in examining her from head to foot. She was wearing a white morning dress, a night-cap, and a Russian jacket.¹ She seemed to be about forty. Her plump and rosy face wore an expression of calm and dignity; her blue eyes and slight smile had an indescribable charm. The lady was the first to break the silence.

"I expect you are a stranger here?" she asked.

"Yes, madam. I came from the country only yesterday."

"Have you come with your relatives?"

"No, madam. I have come alone."

"Alone! But you are so young."

"I have neither father nor mother."

"You are here on business, of course?"

"Yes, madam. I have come to present a petition to the Empress."

"You are an orphan. I suppose you are complaining of some wrong or injustice?"

"No, madam. I have come to ask for mercy, not justice."

"Allow me to ask. What is your name?"

"I am Captain Mironov's daughter."

"Captain Mironov's! The man who was Commandant in one of the Orenburg fortresses?"

"Yes, madam."

The lady was evidently touched.

"Excuse me," she said, "still more kindly, for interfering in your affairs, but I go to Court sometimes. Tell me what your petition is, and perhaps I may be able to help you."

Marya Ivanovna got up and respectfully thanked her

Everything in the unknown lady instinctively attracted her and inspired her with confidence. Marya Ivanovna took a folded paper out of her pocket and gave it to the lady who began reading it to herself.

At first she read with an attentive and kindly air, but suddenly her expression changed and Marya Ivanovna, who was watching her every movement, was frightened at the stern look on her face, so calm and pleasant a moment before.

You are interceding for Grinyov? the lady said coldly. The Empress cannot forgive him. He joined the Pretender not from ignorance and credulity but as a dangerous and immoral scoundrel.

Oh it isn't true! Marya Ivanovna cried.

How it isn't true? the lady repeated, flushing crimson.

It isn't true. I swear to God it isn't! I know all about it. I will tell you everything. It was solely for my sake that he went through it all. And if he hasn't cleared himself before the judges it was only because he did not want to implicate me.

And she told, with great warmth, all that is already known to the reader.

The lady listened to her attentively.

Where have you put up? she asked, and hearing that it was at Anna Vlashevna's, said, with a smile,

Ah I know. Good-bye, do not tell anyone of our meeting. I hope you will not have long to wait for an answer to your letter.

With these words she rose and went into a covered alley, and Marya Ivanovna, full of joyous hope, returned to Anna Vlashevna's.

Her landlady chided her for her early walk, which she said was not good for a young girl's health, as it was autumn. She brought the samovar and just began over a cup of tea her endless stories about the Court when suddenly a Court carriage stopped at the door and a footman from the Palace came into the room saying that the Empress invited Miss Mironov to her presence.

Anna Vlashevna was surprised and flurried.

Dear me! she cried. The Empress sends for you to come to the Palace! How has she heard of you? And how are you going to appear before the Empress my dear? I expect you know nothing about Court manners. Hadn't I better go with you? I could warn you about some things at any rate. And how can you go in your traveling dress? Hadn't we better send to the midwife for her yellow gown?

The footman announced that it was the Empress's pleasure that Marya Ivanovna should come alone and as she was. There was nothing else for it. Marya Ivanovna stepped into the carriage and drove to the Palace accompanied by Anna Vlashevna's admonitions and blessings.

Marya Ivanovna felt that our fate was going to be decided. Her heart was throbbing. A few minutes later the carriage stopped at the Palace. Marya Ivanovna walked up the stair trembling. The doors were flung wide open before her. She walked through a number of deserted luxuriously furnished rooms. The footman was pointing out the way. At last coming to a closed door he said he would go in and announce her and left her alone.

The thought of seeing the Empress face to face terrified her that she could hardly keep on her feet. In another minute the door opened and she walked into the Empress's dressing room.

The Empress was seated in front of her dressing-table. Several courtiers were standing round her but they respectfully made way for Marya Ivanovna. The Empress turned to her kindly and Marya Ivanovna recognized her as the lady to whom she had been talking so freely not many minutes before. The Empress called her to her side and said with a smile:

I am glad that I have been able to keep my promise to you and to grant your request. Your case is settled. I am convinced that your betrothed is innocent. Here is a letter which please take yourself to your future father-in-law.

Marya Ivanovna took the letter with a trembling hand and fell weeping at the feet of the Empress, who lifted her up, kissed her and engaged her in conversation.

I know you are not rich, she said, but I am in debt to Captain Mironov's daughter. Do not worry about the future. I will provide for you.

After saying many kind things to the poor orphan, the Empress dismissed her. Marya Ivanovna was driven back in the same Court carriage. Anna Vlasievna, who had been eagerly awaiting her return, bombarded her with questions to which Marya Ivanovna answered rather vaguely. Anna Vlasievna was disappointed at her remembering so little, but ascribed it to provincial shyness and generously excused her. Marya Ivanovna went back to the country that same day, without troubling to have a look at Petersburg.

The memoirs of Pyotr Andreyich Grinyov end at this point. It is known from the family tradition that he was released from confinement at the end of 1774 at the express order of the Empress, that he was present at the execution of Pugachov, who recognized him in the crowd and nodded to him a minute before his lifeless, bleeding head was held up before the people.

Soon after, Pyotr Andreyich married Marya Ivanovna. Their descendants are flourishing in the province of Simbirsk. Thirty miles from N there is an estate belonging to ten owners. In one of the lodges a letter written by Catherine II may be seen in a frame under glass. It is addressed to Pyotr Andreyich's father. It affirms the innocence of his son and praises the heart and intelligence of Captain Mironov's daughter.

Pyotr Andreyich Grinyov's memoirs have been given to us by one of his grandchildren who had heard that we were engaged upon a work dealing with the period described by his grandfather. With the relatives' consent we have decided to publish it separately, prefixing a suitable epigraph to each chapter and taking the liberty to change some of the proper names.

OMITTED CHAPTER ¹

WE WERE approaching the banks of the Volga. Our regiment entered the village of N. and halted to spend the night there. The village headman told me that all the villages on the other side had rebelled, and that Pugachov's bands were prowling about everywhere. I was very much alarmed at this news. We were to cross the river the following morning.

Impatience possessed me and I could not rest. My father's estate was on the other side of the river, some twenty miles away. I asked if anyone would row me across. All the peasants were fishermen; there were plenty of boats. I came to Zurin and told him of my intention.

"Take care," he said, "it is dangerous for you to go alone. Wait for the morning. We will be the first to cross and will pay a visit to your parents with fifty Hussars in case of emergency."

I insisted on going. The boat was ready. I stepped into it with two boatmen. They pushed off and plied their oars.

The sky was clear. The moon was shining brightly. The air was still. The Volga flowed calmly and evenly. Swaying rhythmically the boat glided over the dark waves Half an hour passed I sank into dreaming I thought of the calm of nature and the horrors of civil war of love and so on We reached the middle of the river Suddenly the boatmen began whispering together

What is it? I asked coming to myself

Heaven only knows we can't tell the boatmen answered looking into the distance

I looked in the same direction and saw in the dark something floating down the river The mysterious object was approaching us I told the oarsmen to stop and wait

The moon hid behind a cloud The floating phantom seemed darker still It was quite close to me and yet I could not distinguish it

Whatever can it be? the boatmen said It isn't a sail nor a mast

Suddenly the moon came out from behind the cloud and lighted a terrible sight A gallows fixed to a raft was floating toward us Three corpses were swinging on the cross bar A morbid curiosity possessed me I wanted to look into the hanged men's faces I told the oarsmen to hold the raft with a boat hook and my boat knocked against the floating gallows I jumped out and found myself between the terrible posts The full moon lighted the disfigured faces of the unfortunate creatures

One of them was an old Chuvash another a Russian peasant boy of about twenty strong and healthy I was shocked when I looked at the third and could not refrain from crying out it was our servant Vanka—poor Vanka who in his foolishness went over to Pugachov A black board was nailed over the gallows and had written on it in white letters

Thieves and rebels The oarsmen waited for me unconcerned holding the raft with the hook I stepped into the boat The raft floated down the river The gal lows showed black in the dim night long after we passed it. At last it disappeared and my boat landed at the high and steep bank.

I paid the oarsmen handsomely. One of them took me to the headman of the village by the landing stage. We went into the hut together. When the headman heard that I was asking for horses he spoke to me rather rudely, but my guide whispered something to him and his sternness immediately gave way to hurried obsequiousness. The troika was ready in a minute. I stepped into the carriage and told the driver to take me to our estate.

We galloped along the high road past the sleeping villages. The only thing I feared was being stopped on the way. My night meeting on the Volga proved the presence of rebels in the district, but it also proved the strong counter action on the part of the authorities. To meet all emergencies I had in my pocket the pass given me by Pugachov and Colonel Zurn's order. But I did not meet anyone and, toward morning, I saw the river and the pine copse behind which lay our village. The driver whipped up the horses and in another quarter of an hour I drove into it. Our house stood at the other end. The horses were going at full speed. Suddenly in the middle of the village street the driver began pulling up.

What is it? I asked impatiently.

A barrier, sir," the driver answered, with difficulty bringing the fuming horses to a standstill.

Indeed! I saw a barrier fixed across the road and a watchman with a club. The man came up to me and taking off his hat asked for my passport.

What does this mean? I asked him. Why is this barrier here? Whom are you guarding?

"Why, sir, we are in rebellion," he answered, scratching himself.

And where are your masters? I asked with a sinking heart

Where are our masters? the peasant repeated
Master and mistress are in the granary

In the granary?

Why Andryushka the headman¹ put them in stocks you see and wants to take them to our Father Czar

Good Heaven! Lift the bar you blockhead! What are you gaping at?

The watchman did not move I jumped out of the carriage gave him a box on the ear I am sorry to say and lifted the bar myself

The peasant looked at me in stupid perplexity I took my seat in the carriage once more and told the driver to drive to the house as fast as he could Two peasants armed with clubs were standing by the locked doors of the granary The carriage drew up just in front of them I jumped out and rushed at them

Open the doors! I said to them

I must have looked formidable for they threw down their clubs and ran away I tried to knock the lock off the door or to pick it but the doors were of oak and the huge lock was unbreakable At that moment a young peasant came out of the servants' quarters and haughtily asked me how I dared to make a disturbance

Where is Andryushka the headman? I shouted to him "Call him to me"

I am Andrey Afanasyevich and not Andryushka he answered proudly with his arms akimbo What do you want?

By way of an answer I seized him by the collar and dragging him to the granary doors told him to open them He did not comply at once but the fatherly chastisement had due effect upon him. He pulled out the key and unlocked the granary. I rushed over the threshold and saw in a dark corner dimly lighted by a narrow skylight my father and mother. Their hands were tied and their feet were in stocks. I flew to embrace them and could not utter a word. They both looked at me with amazement. Three years of military life had so altered me that they could not recognize me.

Suddenly I heard the sweet voice I knew. Pyotr Andreyich! It's you?

I turned round and saw Marva Ivanovna in another corner also bound hand and foot. I was dumbfounded. My father looked at me in silence, not daring to believe his senses. His face lit up with joy.

Welcome, Petrusha, he said, pressing me to his heart. Thank God, we have lived to see you!

My mother cried out and burst into tears.

Petrusha, my darling! she said. "How has the Lord brought you here? Are you well?"

I hastened to cut with my sword the ropes that bound them and to take them out of their prison. But when I came to the door I found that it had been locked again.

Andryushka, open! I shouted.

No fear! the man answered from behind the door. You may as well sit here, too! We'll teach you how to be rowdy and drag the Czar's officials by the collar!

I began looking round the granary to see if there was some way of getting out.

Don't trouble, my father said to me. It's not my way to have granaries into which thieves could find a way.

My mother, who had rejoiced a moment before at my coming, was overcome with despair at the thought that I, too, would have to perish with the rest of the family But I was calmer now that I was with them and Marya Ivanovna I had a sword and two pistols I could withstand a siege Zurin was due to arrive in the evening and would set us free I told all this to my parents and succeeded in calming my mother and Marya Ivanovna They gave themselves up completely to the joy of our meeting and several hours passed for us imperceptibly in expressions of affection and continual conversation

Well Pyotr my father said you have been foolish enough and I was quite angry with you at the time But it's no use remembering old scores I hope that you have sown your wild oats and are reformed I know that you have served as an honest officer should I thank you you have comforted me in my old age If I owe my deliverance to you life will be doubly pleasant to me

I kissed his hand with tears and gazed at Marya Ivanovna who was so overjoyed at my presence that she seemed quite calm and happy

About midday we heard extraordinary uproar and shouting What does this mean? my father said Can it already be your colonel?

Impossible I answered He won't come before evening

The noise increased The alarm bell was rung We heard men on horseback galloping across the yard At that moment Savelyich's gray head was thrust through the narrow opening cut in the wall and the poor old man said in a pitiful voice

Andrey Petrovich! Pyotr Andreyich my dear! Marya Ivanovna! We are lost! The villains have come into the village And do you know who has brought them, Pyotr Andreyich? Shvabrin Alexey Ivanych damnation take him!

When Marya Ivanovna heard the hated name she clasped her hands¹ and remained motionless

Listen! I said to Savelyich Send someone on horseback to the ferry to meet the hussar regiment and to tell the Colonel of our danger

But whom can I send sir? All the boys have joined the rebels and the horses have all been seized Oh, dear! There they are in the yard! They are coming to the granary

As he said this we heard several voices behind the door I made a sign to my mother and Marya Ivanovna to move away into a corner bared my sword, and leaned against the wall just by the door My father took the pistols, cocked them both and stood beside me The lock rattled the door opened and Andryushka's head showed I hit it with my sword and he fell, blocking the doorway At the same moment my father fired the pistol The crowd that had besieged us ran away, cursing I dragged the wounded man across the threshold and closed the door

The courtyard was full of armed men I recognized Shvabrin among them

Don't be afraid I said to the women, there is hope And don't you shoot any more father Let us save up the last shot

My mother was praying silently Marya Ivanovna stood beside her waiting with angelic calm for her fate to be decided Threats abuse and curses were heard behind the door I was standing in the same place ready to hit the first man who dared to show himself Suddenly the villains subsided I heard Shvabrin's voice calling me by name

"I am here What do you want?"

Surrender Grinyov resistance is impossible Have pity on your old people. Obstinacy will not save you. I shall get at you!

Try traitor!

I am not going to put myself forward for nothing or waste my men. I will set the granary on fire and then we'll see what you will do. Belogorsky Don Quixote. Now it is time to have dinner. Meanwhile you can sit and think it over at leisure. Good bye! Marya Ivanovna, I do not apologize to you, you are probably not feeling bored with your knight beside you in the dark.

Shvabrin went away leaving sentries at the door. We were silent, each of us thinking his own thoughts, not daring to express them to the others. I was picturing to myself all that Shvabrin was capable of doing in his malice. I hardly cared about myself. Must I confess it? Even my parents' fate terrified me less than Marya Ivanovna's. I knew that my mother was adored by the peasants and the house serfs. My father too was loved in spite of his sternness, for he was just and knew the true needs of the men he owned. Their rebellion was a delusion, a passing intoxication, and not the expression of their resentment. It was possible that my parents would be spared. But Marya Ivanovna? What did the dissolute and unscrupulous man hold in store for her? I did not dare to dwell upon this awful thought and would have killed her (God forgive me!) sooner than see her fall once more into the hands of the cruel enemy.

Another hour passed. Drunken men could be heard singing in the village. Our sentries envied them and in their annoyance abused us, threatening us with tortures and death. We were waiting for Shvabrin to carry out his threat. At last there was great commotion in the courtyard and we heard Shvabrin's voice once more.

Well have you thought better of it? Do you surrender to me of your own will?

No one answered

After waiting a while, Shvabrin ordered his men to bring some straw. In a few minutes flames appeared lighting the dim granary. Smoke began to rise from under the door.

Then Marya Ivanovna came up to me and taking me by the hand said in a low voice

Come Pyotr Andreyich don't let both you self and your parents perish because of me. Shvabrin will listen to me. Let me out!

Never! I cried angrily. Do you know what awaits you?

I will not survive dishonor she answered calmly but perhaps I shall save my deliverer and the family that has so generously sheltered a poor orphan. Good bye Andrey Petrovich! Good bye Avdotya Vassilyevna! You have been more than benefactors to me. Bless me! Farewell to you too Pyotr Andreyich. Believe me that that

She burst into tears and buried her face in her hands.

I was beside myself. My mother was weeping.

Stop this nonsense Marya Ivanovna said my father. Whoever would dream of letting you go alone to the brigands? Sit here and keep quiet. If we must die we may as well die together. Listen! What is he saying now?

Do you surrender? Shvabrin shouted. You see you will be roasted in another five minutes.

We won't surrender you villain! my father answered firmly.

His vigorous, deeply lined face was wonderfully animated. His eyes sparkled under the gray eyebrows. Turning to me, he said. Now's the time!

He opened the door. The flames rushed in and rose up to the beams whose chinks were stuffed with dry moss. My father fired the pistol, stepped over the burning threshold and shouted, "Follow me!" I took my mother and Marya Ivanovna by the hands and quickly led them out. Shvabrin, shot through by my father's feeble hand, was lying by the threshold. The crowd of brigands who had rushed away at our sudden sally took courage and began closing in upon us. I succeeded in dealing a few more blows, but a well aimed brick hit me right on the chest. I fell down and lost consciousness for a few moments. I was surrounded and disarmed. Coming to myself I saw Shvabrin sitting on the blood stained grass, with all our family standing before him.

I was supported under the arms. A crowd of peasants, Cossacks and Bashkirs hemmed us in. Shvabrin was terribly pale. He was pressing one hand to his wounded side. His face expressed malice and pain. He slowly raised his head, glanced at me and said in a weak, hardly audible voice:

Hang him and all of them except her

The crowd surrounded us at once and dragged us to the gates. But suddenly they left us and scampered away. Zurin and a whole squadron of Hussars, with bared swords, rode into the courtyard.

The rebels were flying as fast as they could. The Hussars pursued them, striking right and left with their swords and taking prisoners. Zurin jumped off his horse, bowed to my father and mother and warmly clasped me by the hand.

"I have come just in time," he said to me. "Ah, and here is your betrothed!"

Marya Ivanovna flushed crimson. My father went up to him and thanked him calmly, though he was obviously touched. My mother embraced him, calling him an angel-deliverer.

Welcome to our home! my father said to him and led him toward the house

Zurin stopped as he passed Shvabrin

Who is this? he asked looking at the wounded man

It is the leader of the gang my father answered, with a certain pride that betokened an old soldier. God has helped my feeble hand to punish the young villain and to avenge the blood of my son

It is Shvabrin I said to Zurin

Shvabrin! I am very glad Hussars take him! Tell the seer to dress his wound and to take the utmost care of him. Shvabrin must certainly be sent to the Kazan Secret Commission. He is one of the chief criminals and his evidence may be of great importance

Shvabrin wearily opened his eyes. His face expressed nothing but physical pain. The Hussars carried him away on an outspread cloak.

We went into the house. I looked about me with a tremor remembering the years of my childhood. Nothing had changed in the house, everything was in its usual place. Shvabrin had not allowed it to be pillaged preserving in his very degradation an unconscious aversion to base cupidity.

The servants came into the hall. They had taken no part in the rebellion and were genuinely glad of our deliverance. Savelyich was triumphant. It must be mentioned that during the alarm produced by the brigands' arrival he ran to the stables where Shvabrin's horse had been put, saddled it, led it out quietly and unnoticed in the confusion, galloped toward the ferry. He met the regiment having a rest this side of the Volga. When Zurin heard from him of our danger, he ordered his men to mount, cried Off! Off! Gallop! and thank God, arrived in time.

Zurin insisted that Andryushka's head should be exposed for a few hours at the top of a pole by the tavern.

The Hussars returned from their pursuit bringing several prisoners with them. They were locked in the same granary where we had endured our memorable siege. We all went to our rooms. The old people needed a rest. As I had not slept the whole night I flung myself on the bed and dropped fast asleep. Zurin went to make his arrangements.

In the evening we all met round the samovar in the drawing room talking gaily of the past danger. Marya Ivanovna poured out the tea. I sat down beside her and devoted myself entirely to her. My parents seemed to look with favor upon the tenderness of our relations. That evening lives in my memory to this day. I was happy completely happy—and are there many such moments in poor human life?

The following day my father was told that the peasants had come to ask his pardon. My father went out on to the steps to talk to them. When the peasants saw him they knelt down.

Well you silly fools! he said to them whatever did you rebel for?

We are sorry master they answered as one man.

Sorry are you? They get into mischief and then they are sorry! I forgive you for the sake of our family joy—God has allowed me to see my son Pyotr Andreich again. So be it a sin confessed is a sin forgiven.

We did wrong of course we did.

God has sent fine weather. It is time for hay making and what have you been doing for the last three days you fools? Headman! send everyone to make hay and mind that by St. John's Day all the hay is in stacks, you red haired rascal! Begone!

The peasants bowed and went to work as though nothing had happened. Shvabrin's wound proved not to be mortal. He was sent under escort to Kazan. I saw from the window how they laid him in a cart. Our eyes met. He bent his head and I made haste to move away from the window. I was afraid of looking as though I were triumphing over a humiliated and unhappy enemy.

Zurin had to go on farther. I decided to join him, in spite of my desire to spend a few more days with my family. On the eve of the march I came to my parents and in accordance with the custom of the time, bowed down to the ground before them asking their blessing on my marriage with Marya Ivanovna. The old people lifted me up and with joyous tears gave their consent. I brought Marya Ivanovna pale and trembling to them. They blessed us. I will not attempt to describe what I was feeling. Those who have been in my position will understand; as to those who have not I can only pity them and advise them while there is still time to fall in love and receive their parents' blessing.

The following day our regiment was ready. Zurin took leave of our family. We were all certain that the military operations would soon be over. I was hoping to be married in another month's time. Marya Ivanovna kissed me in front of all as she said good bye. I mounted my horse. Savelyich followed me again and the regiment marched off. For a long time I kept looking back at the country house that I was leaving once more. A gloomy foreboding tormented me. Something seemed to whisper to me that my misfortunes were not yet over. My heart felt that another storm was ahead.

I will not describe our campaign and the end of the Pugachov war. We passed through villages pillaged by Pugachov and could not help taking from the poor inhabitants what the brigands had left them.

They did not know whom to obey. There was no lawful authority anywhere. The landowners were hid ing in the forests. Bands of brigands were ransacking the country. The chiefs of separate detachments sent in pursuit of Pugachov, who was by then retreating toward Astrakhan, arbitrarily punished both the guilty and the innocent. The entire region where the conflagration had raged was in a terrible state. God save us from seeing a Russian revolt, senseless and merciless. Those who plot impossible upheavals among us are either young and do not know our people or are hard-hearted men who do not care a straw either about their own lives or those of other people.

Unfinished Stories

THE NEGRO OF PETER THE GREAT

I

AMONG the young men sent abroad by Peter the Great for the acquisition of knowledge indispensable to a country in a state of transition was his god son the Negro Ibrahim. After being educated in the Military School at Paris which he left with the rank of Captain of Artillery he distinguished himself in the Spanish war and severely wounded returned to Paris. The Emperor in the midst of his vast labors never ceased to inquire after his favorite and he always received flattering accounts of his progress and conduct. Peter was exceedingly pleased with him and repeatedly requested him to return to Russia but Ibrahim was in no hurry. He excused himself under various pretexts now it was his wound now it was a wish to complete his education now a want of money and Peter indulgently complied with his wishes begged him to take care of his health thanked him for his zeal for study and although extremely thrifty where his own expenses were concerned he did not stint his favorite in money adding to the ducats fatherly advice and cautionary admonition.

According to the testimony of all the historical memoirs nothing could be compared with the frivolity folly and luxury of the French of that period. The last year of the reign of Louis the Fourteenth remarkable for the strict piety, gravity, and decorum of the Court had left no traces behind. The Duke of Orleans uniting many brilliant qualities with vices of every kind unfortunately did not possess the slightest shadow of hypocrisy. The orgies of the Palais Royal were no secret in Paris: the example was infectious. At that time Law¹ appeared upon the scene: greed for money was united to the thirst for pleasure and dissipation, estates were squandered, morals perished. Frenchmen laughed and calculated, and the kingdom was falling apart to the playful refrains of satirical vaudevilles.

In the meantime society presented a most entertaining picture. Culture and the need of amusement brought all ranks together. Wealth, amiability, renown, talent, even eccentricity—everything that fed curiosity or promised pleasure, was received with the same indulgence. Literature, learning and philosophy forsook their quiet studies and appeared in the circles of the great world to render homage to fashion and to govern it. Women reigned, but no longer demanded adoration. Superficial politeness replaced the profound respect formerly shown to them. The pranks of the Duke de Richelieu, the Alcibiades of modern Athens, belong to history, and give an idea of the morals of that period.

The appearance of Ibrahim, his looks, culture and native intelligence excited general attention in Paris.

TRANSLATOR'S P. 75

All the ladies were anxious to see le negre du czar at their houses and vied with each other in trying to capture him. The Regent invited him more than once to his merry evening parties. He assisted at the suppers animated by the youth of Arouet the old age of Chau lieu and the conversations of Montesquieu and Fontenelle. He did not miss a single ball fete or first night and he gave himself up to the general whirl with all the ardor of his years and nature. But the thought of exchanging these distractions these brilliant amusements for the harsh simplicity of the Petersburg Court was not the only thing that dismayed Ibrahim. Other and stronger ties bound him to Paris. The young African was in love.

The Countess D—— although no longer in the first bloom of youth was still renowned for her beauty. On leaving the convent at seventeen she had been married to a man with whom she had not had time to fall in love and who later on did not take the trouble to gain her affection. Rumor ascribed several lovers to her but such was the indulgence of the world that she enjoyed a good reputation for nobody was able to reproach her with any ridiculous or scandalous adventure. Her house was one of the most fashionable and the best Parisian society made it their rendezvous. Ibrahim was introduced to her by young Merville, who was generally looked upon as her latest lover—and who did all in his power to obtain credit for the report.

The Countess received Ibrahim courteously but without any particular attention thus flattered him. Generally the young Negro was regarded in the light of a curiosity people used to surround him and overwhelm him with compliments and questions—and this curiosity although concealed by a show of graciousness offended his vanity. Women's delightful attention almost the sole aim of our exertions not only af forded him no pleasure but even filled him with bitterness and indignation. He felt that he was for them a kind of rare beast a peculiar alien creature, accidentally brought into a world with which he had nothing in common. He even envied people who remained unnoticed and considered them fortunate in their insignificance.

The thought that nature had not created him to enjoy requited love saved him from self assurance and vain pretensions and added a rare charm to his behavior toward women. His conversation was simple and dignified he pleased Countess D—, who had grown tired of the eternal jokes and subtle insinuations of French wits. Ibrahim frequently visited her. Little by little she became accustomed to the young Negro's appearance and even began to find something agreeable in that curly head that stood out so black in the midst of the powdered perukes in her reception room (Ibrahim had been wounded in the head and wore a bandage instead of a peruke). He was twenty seven years of age and was tall and slender and more than one beauty glanced at him with a feeling more flattering than simple curiosity. But the prejudiced Ibrahim either did not observe anything of this or merely looked upon it as coquetry. But when his glances met those of the Countess his distrust vanished. Her eyes expressed such winning kindness her manner toward him was so simple so unconstrained that it was impossible to suspect her of the least shadow of coquetry or saillery.

The thought of love had not entered his head but to see the Countess each day had become a necessity to him. He sought her out everywhere and every meeting with her seemed an unexpected favor from heaven. The Countess guessed his feelings before he himself did. There is no denying that a love which is without hope and which demands nothing touches the female heart more surely than all the devices of seduction. In the presence of Ibrahim the Countess followed all his movements listened to every word that he said, without him she became thoughtful and fell into her usual abstraction. Merville was the first to observe his mutual inclination and he congratulated Ibrahim. Nothing inflames love so much as the encouraging observations of a bystander: love is blind and having no trust in itself, readily grasps hold of every support.

Merville's words roused Ibrahim. He had never till then imagined the possibility of possessing the woman that he loved: hope suddenly illumined his soul: he fell madly in love. In vain did the Countess alarmed by the ardor of his passion seek to oppose to it the admonitions of friendship and the counsels of prudence: she herself was beginning to weaken. In cautious rewards swiftly followed one another. And at last carried away by the force of the passion she had herself inspired surrendering to its influence she gave herself to the ravished Ibrahim.

Nothing is hidden from the eyes of the observing world. The Countess's new liaison was soon known to everybody. Some ladies were amazed at her choice: to many it seemed quite natural. Some laughed: others regarded her conduct as unpardonably indiscreet. In the first intoxication of passion, Ibrahim and the Countess noticed nothing: but soon the equivocal jokes of the men and the pointed remarks of the women began to reach their ears. Ibrahim's cold and dignified manner had hitherto protected him from such attacks: he bore them with impatience and knew not how to ward them off. The Countess accustomed to the respect of the world could not calmly bear to see herself an object of gossip and ridicule. With tears in her eyes she complained to Ibrahim, now bitterly reproaching him, now imploring him not to defend her, lest by some useless scandal she should be completely ruined

A new circumstance further complicated her position the consequence of imprudent love began to be apparent Consolation advice proposals—all were exhausted and all rejected The Countess saw that her ruin was inevitable and in despair awaited it

As soon as the condition of the Countess became known tongues wagged again with fresh vigor, sentimental women gave vent to exclamations of horror, men wagered as to whether the Countess would give birth to a white or a black baby Numerous epigrams were aimed at her husband who alone in all Paris knew nothing and suspected nothing

The fatal moment approached The condition of the Countess was terrible Ibrahim visited her every day He saw her mental and physical strength gradually giving way Her tears and her terror were renewed every moment Finally she felt the first pains Measures were hastily taken Means were found for getting the Count out of the way The doctor arrived Two days before this a poor woman had been persuaded to surrender to strangers her new born infant a trusted person had been sent for it Ibrahim was in the room adjoining the bedchamber where the unhappy Countess lay not daring to breathe he heard her muffled groans, the maid's whisper and the doctor's orders Her sufferings lasted a long time Her every groan lacerated his heart Every interval of silence overwhelmed him with terror Suddenly he heard the weak cry of a baby—and unable to repress his elation he rushed into the Countess's room A black baby lay upon the bed at her feet Ibrahim approached it His heart beat violently He blessed his son with a trembling hand The Countess smiled faintly and stretched out to him her feeble hand but the doctor, fearing that the excitement might be too great for the patient, dragged Ibrahim away from her bed. The new born child was placed in a covered basket and carried out of the house by a secret staircase. Then the other child was brought in and its cradle placed in the bedroom. Ibrahim took his departure, feeling somewhat more at ease. The Count was expected. He returned late, heard of the happy delivery of his wife and was much gratified. In this way the public, which had been expecting a great scandal, was deceived in its hope and was compelled to console itself with malicious gossip alone. Everything resumed its usual course.

But Ibrahim felt that there would have to be a change in his lot, and that sooner or later his relations with the Countess would come to the knowledge of her husband. In that case, whatever might happen, the ruin of the Countess was inevitable. Ibrahim loved passionately and was passionately loved in return, but the Countess was wilful and frivolous, it was not the first time that she had loved. Disgust and even hatred might replace in her heart the most tender feelings. Ibrahim already foresaw the moment when she would cool toward him. Hitherto he had not known jealousy, but with dread he now felt a presentiment of it. He thought that the pain of separation would be less distressing and he resolved to break off the unhappy connection, leave Paris, and return to Russia, whither Peter and a vague sense of duty had been calling him for a long time.

II

DAYS months passed and the enamored Ibrahim could not resolve to leave the woman that he had seduced. The Countess grew more and more attached to him. Their son was being brought up in a distant province The slanders of the world were beginning to subside, and the lovers began to enjoy greater tranquillity silently remembering the past storm and endeavoring not to think of the future

One day Ibrahim attended a levee at the Duke of Orleans residence The Duke passing by him stopped and handing him a letter, told him to read it at his leisure It was a letter from Peter the First The Emperor guessing the true cause of his absence, wrote to the Duke that he had no intention of compelling Ibrahim that he left it to his own free will to return to Russia or not but that in any case he would never abandon his former foster-child This letter touched Ibrahim to the bottom of his heart From that moment his lot was settled The next day he informed the Regent of his intention to set out immediately for Russia

Consider what you are doing said the Duke to him Russia is not your native country I do not think that you will ever again see your torrid birthplace but your long residence in France has made you equally a stranger to the climate and the ways of life of half savage Russia You were not born a subject of Peter Listen to my advice take advantage of his magnanimous permission remain in France, for which you have already shed your blood and rest assured that here your services and talents will not remain unrewarded"

Ibrahim thanked the Duke sincerely but remained firm in his resolution

"I am sorry said the Regent but perhaps you are right

He promised to let him retire from the French service and wrote a full account of the matter to the Czar

Ibrahim was soon ready for the journey He spent the evening before his departure at the house of the Countess D—, as usual She knew nothing Ibrahim had not the heart to inform her of his intention The Countess was calm and cheerful. She several times called him to her and joked about his being so pensive. After supper the guests departed. The Countess, her husband, and Ibrahim were left alone in the parlor. The unhappy man would have given everything in the world to have been left alone with her, but Count D—— seemed to have seated himself so comfortably beside the fire that there was no hope of getting him out of the room. All three remained silent.

Bonne nuit! said the Countess at last.

Ibrahim's heart contracted and he suddenly felt all the horrors of parting. He stood motionless.

Bonne nuit, messieurs! repeated the Countess.

Still he remained motionless. At last his eyes darkened, his head swam round, and he could scarcely walk out of the room. On reaching home he wrote almost unconsciously the following letter.

I am going away dear Leonora. I am leaving you forever. I am writing to you because I have not the strength to tell it to you otherwise.

My happiness could not last. I have enjoyed it in spite of fate and nature. You were bound to stop loving me; the enchantment was bound to vanish. This thought has always pursued me, even in those moments when I have seemed to forget everything, when at your feet I have been intoxicated by your passionate self-denial, by your unbounded tenderness. The frivolous world unmercifully persecutes in fact that which it permits in theory; its cold mockery sooner or later would have languished you, would have humbled your ardent soul, and at last you would have become ashamed of your passion. What would then have become of me? No, it is better to die, better to leave you before that terrible moment.

Your peace is dearer to me than anything you could not enjoy it while the eyes of the world were fixed upon us Recall all that you have suffered all the insults to your amour propre all the tortures of fear remember the terrible birth of our son Think ought I to expose you any longer to such agitations and dangers? Why should I endeavor to unite the fate of such a tender beautiful creature to the miserable fate of a Negro of a pitiable creature scarce worthy of the name of man?

Farewell Leonora farewell my dear and only friend I am leaving you I am leaving the first and last joy of my life I have neither fatherland nor kindred I am going to gloomy Russia where my utter solitude will be a consolation to me Serious work to which from now on I shall devote myself will at least divert me from if not stifle painful recollections of the days of rapture and bliss Farewell Leonora! I tear myself away from this letter as if from your embrace Farewell be happy and think sometimes of the poor Negro of your faithful Ibrahim

That same night he set out for Russia

The journey did not seem to him as terrible as he had expected His imagination triumphed over the reality The farther he got from Paris the more vivid and nearer rose up before him the objects he was leaving forever

Before he was aware of it he found himself at the Russian frontier Autumn had already set in but the coachmen in spite of the bad state of the roads, drove him with the speed of the wind and on the seventeenth day of his journey he arrived at Krasnoe Selo through which at that time the high road passed

It was still a distance of twenty-eight verstas to Petersburg While the horses were being hitched up Ibrahim entered the post house In a corner a tall man in a green castan and with a clay pipe in his mouth his elbows upon the table, was reading the Hamburg news papers. Hearing somebody enter he raised his head.

Ah Ibrahim! he exclaimed rising from the bench. How do you do, godson?

Ibrahim recognized Peter and in his delight was about to rush toward him but he respectfully paused. The Emperor approached, embraced him and kissed him upon the head.

I was informed of your coming, said Peter, and set off to meet you. I have been waiting for you here since yesterday.

Ibrahim could not find words to express his gratitude.

Let your carriage follow on behind us, continued the Emperor, and you take your place by my side and ride along with me.

The Czar's carriage was driven up, he took his seat with Ibrahim and they set off at a gallop. In about an hour and a half they reached Petersburg. Ibrahim gazed with curiosity at the new born city which was springing up out of the marsh at the beek of the autocrat. Bare dams, canals without embankments, wooden bridges everywhere testified to the recent triumph of the human will over the hostile elements. The houses seemed to have been built in a hurry. In the whole town there was nothing magnificent but the Neva, not yet ornamented with its granite frame but already covered with warships and merchant vessels. The imperial carriage stopped at the palace, the so-called Czarina's Garden. On the steps Peter was met by a woman of about thirty five years of age, handsome and dressed in the latest Parisian fashion. Peter kissed her on the lips and taking Ibrahim by the hand said:

Do you recognize my godson, Katunka? I beg you to treat him as kindly as you used to.

Catherine fixed on him her dark piercing eyes and stretched out her hand to him in a friendly manner. Two young beauties, tall slender and fresh as roses, stood behind her and respectfully approached Peter.

LIZI said he to one of them, do you remember the little Negro who stole my apples for you at Oranienbaum? Here he is let me introduce him to you.

The Grand Duchess laughed and blushed. They went into the dining room. In expectation of the Czar the table had been laid. Peter sat down to dinner with all his family and invited Ibrahim to sit down with them. During dinner the Emperor conversed with him on various subjects, questioned him about the Spanish war, the internal affairs of France and the Regent whom he liked, although he condemned much in him. Ibrahim possessed an exact and observant mind. Peter was very pleased with his replies. He recalled to mind some features of Ibrahim's childhood, and related them with such good humor and gaiety that nobody could have suspected this kind and hospitable host to be the hero of Poltava, the dread and mighty reformer of Russia.

After dinner the Emperor, according to the Russian custom, retired to rest. Ibrahim remained with the Empress and the Grand Duchesses. He tried to satisfy their curiosity, described the Parisian way of life, the holidays that were kept there and the changeable fashions. In the meantime some of the persons belonging to the Emperor's suite had assembled in the palace. Ibrahim recognized the magnificent Prince Menshikov, who seeing the Negro conversing with Catherine, cast an arrogant glance at him, Prince Jacob Dolgoruky, Peter's stern counselor, the learned Bruce, who had acquired among the people the name of the "Russian Faust," the young Raguzinsky, his former companion, and others who had come to make their reports to the Emperor and to receive his orders

In about two hours time the Emperor appeared

Let us see said he to Ibrahim if you have forgotten your old duties Take a slate and follow me

Peter shut himself up in his turnery and busied himself with state affairs He worked in turns with Bruce with Prince Dolgoruky and with the chief of police General Devier and dictated to Ibrahim several ukases and decisions Ibrahim could not sufficiently admire the quickness and firmness of his understanding the strength and flexibility of his powers of attention and the variety of his occupations When the work was finished Peter drew out a notebook in order to see if all that he had proposed to do that day had been accomplished Then issuing from the work room he said to Ibrahim

It is late no doubt you are tired—sleep here to night as you used to do in the old days, tomorrow I will wake you

Ibrahim on being left alone could hardly collect his thoughts He was in Petersburg he saw again the great man near whom not yet knowing his worth he had passed his childhood Almost with regret he confessed to himself that the Countess D—— for the first time since their separation had not been his sole thought during the whole of the day He saw that the new mode of life which awaited him—the activity and constant occupation—would revive his soul wearied by passion, idleness and secret grief The thought of being a great man's co worker and together with him influencing the fate of a great nation aroused within him for the first time the noble feeling of ambition In this disposition of mind he lay down upon the camp bed prepared for him and then the usual dreams came ried him back to far-off Paris, to the arms of his dear Countess

III

THE NEXT morning Peter according to his promise, woke Ibrahim and congratulated him on his elevation to the rank of Captain lieutenant of the Artillery company of the Preobrazhensky Regiment, in which he himself was Captain. The courtiers surrounded Ibrahim each in his way trying to be attentive to the new favorite. The haughty Prince Menshikov pressed his hand in a friendly manner. Sheremetyev inquired after his Parisian acquaintances and Golovin invited him to dinner. Others followed the example of the latter so that Ibrahim received enough invitations to last him at least a whole month.

Ibrahim now began to lead a monotonous but busy life consequently he did not feel at all dull. From day to day he became more attached to the Emperor, and was better able to comprehend his lofty soul. To follow the thoughts of a great man is a most absorbing study. Ibrahim saw Peter in the Senate arguing weighty questions of legislation with Buturlin and Dolgoruky with the Admiralty committee establishing the naval power of Russia. He saw him with Feofan Gavril Buzhinsky and Kopevich in his free hours examining translations of foreign authors or visiting the factory of a merchant, the workshop of a mechanic, or the study of a savant. Russia presented to Ibrahim the appearance of a huge workshop where machines alone move where each workman subject to established rules, is occupied with his own particular business. He too felt obliged to work at his own bench and he endeavored to regret as little as possible the gaieties of his Parisian life. But it was more difficult for him to drive from his mind another and dear memory he often thought of the Countess D—— and pictured to himself her just indignation her tears and her despondency But sometimes a terrible thought oppressed his heart the distractions of the great world a new tie another favorite—he shuddered jealousy began to set his African blood boiling and hot tears were ready to roll down his black face

One morning he was sitting in his study surrounded by business papers when suddenly he heard a loud greeting in French Ibrahim turned round quickly and young Korsakov whom he had left in Paris in the whirl of the great world embraced him with joyful exclamations

I have only just arrived said Korsakov and I have come straight to you All our Parisian acquaintances send their greetings to you and regret your absence The Countess D—— ordered me to summon you to return without fail and here is her letter to you

Ibrahim seized it with a trembling hand and looked at the familiar handwriting of the address not daring to believe his eyes

How glad I am continued Korsakov that you have not yet died of ennui in this barbarous Petersburg! What do people do here? How do they occupy themselves? Who is your tailor? Have you opera at least?

Ibrahim absently replied that probably the Emperor was just then at work in the dockyard

Korsakov laughed

I see said he that you can't attend to me just now some other time we will talk to our heart's content I will go now and pay my respects to the Emperor

With these words he turned on his heel and hastened out of the room.

Ibrahim, left alone, hastily opened the letter. The Countess tenderly complained to him reproaching him with dissimulation and distrust.

You say wrote she that my peace is dearer to you than everything in the world. Ibrahim, if this were the truth would you have brought me to the condition to which I was reduced by the unexpected news of your departure? You were afraid that I might have detained you. Be assured that, in spite of my love I should have known how to sacrifice it for your happiness and for what you consider your duty.

The Countess ended the letter with passionate assurances of love and implored him to write to her if only now and then even though there should be no hope of their ever seeing each other again.

Ibrahim read this letter through twenty times kissing the priceless lines with rapture. He was burning with impatience to hear something about the Countess and he was just preparing to set out for the Admiralty, hoping to find Korsakov still there when the door opened and Korsakov himself appeared once more. He had already paid his respects to the Emperor and as was usual with him he seemed very well satisfied with himself.

Entre nous he said to Ibrahim the Emperor is a very strange person. Just fancy I found him in a sort of linen singlet on the mast of a new ship whither I was compelled to climb with my dispatches. I stood on the rope ladder and had not sufficient room to make a suitable bow and so I became completely confused a thing that had never happened to me in my life before. However when the Emperor had read my letter he looked at me from head to foot and no doubt was agreeably struck by the taste and smartness of my at ture at any rate he smiled and invited me to tonight's assembly. But I am a perfect stranger in Petersburg in the six years that I have been away I have quite forgotten the local customs pray be my mentor call for me and introduce me.

Ibrahim agreed to do so and hastened to turn the conversation to a subject that was more interesting to him.

Well and how is the Countess D——?

The Countess? Of course at first she was very much grieved on account of your departure then of course little by little she found solace and took a new lover do you know whom? The lanky Marquis R——. Why are you staring at me so with your Negro eyes? Or does it seem strange to you? Don't you know that lasting grief is not in human nature particularly in feminine nature? Chew on this while I go and rest after my journey, and don't forget to come and call for me.

What feelings filled the soul of Ibrahim? Jealousy? Rage? Despair? No but a deep oppressing despondency. He repeated to himself I foresaw it it had to happen. Then he opened the Countess's letter read it again hung his head and wept bitterly. He went for a long time. The tears relieved his heart. Looking at the clock he perceived that it was time to set out. Ibrahim would have been very glad to stay away but the assembly was a matter of duty and the Emperor strictly demanded the presence of his retainers. He dressed himself and started out to call for Korsakov.

Korsakov was sitting in his dressing gown reading a French book.

So early? he said to Ibrahim on seeing him.

Mercy the latter replied it is already half past five, we shall be late make haste and dress and let us go.

Korsakov in a flurry, rang the bell with all his might, the servants came running in and he began hastily to dress himself. His French valet gave him shoes with red heels, blue velvet breeches and a pink castan embroidered with spangles. His peruke was hurriedly powdered in the ante-chamber and brought in to him. Korsakov stuck his cropped head into it, asked for his sword and gloves, turned round about ten times before the glass and then informed Ibrahim that he was ready. The footmen handed them their bearskin greatcoats and they set out for the Winter Palace.

Korsakov overwhelmed Ibrahim with questions. Who was the greatest beauty in Petersburg? Who was supposed to be the best dancer? Which dance was just then the rage? Ibrahim very reluctantly gratified his curiosity. Meanwhile they reached the palace. A great number of long sledges, old-fashioned carriages and gilded coaches already stood on the lawn. Near the steps were crowded liveried and mustachioed coachmen, messengers resplendent in tinsel and plumes and bearing maces, hussars, pages and clumsy footmen loaded with the coats and muffs of their masters—a retinue indispensable according to the notions of the gentry of that time. At the sight of Ibrahim a general murmur arose. The Negro, the Negro, the Czar's Negro! He hurriedly conducted Korsakov through this motley crowd. The Court lackey opened the doors wide and they entered the hall. Korsakov was dumb-founded. In a large room illuminated by tallow candles which burnt dimly amidst clouds of tobacco smoke, magnates with blue ribbons across the shoulders, ambassadors, foreign merchants, officers of the Guard in green uniforms, ship masters in jackets and striped trousers, moved backwards and forwards in rows to the uninterrupted sound of the music of wind instruments. The ladies sat against the walls, the young ones being decked out in all the splendor of the prevailing fashion. Gold and silver glittered upon their gowns; out of sumptuous farthingales their slender forms rose like flower stalks; diamonds sparkled in their ears, in their long curls, and around their necks. They turned gaily about to the right and to the left, waiting for their cavaliers and for the dancing to begin. The elderly ladies craftily endeavored to combine the new fashions with the proscribed style of the past: their caps resembled the sable head dress of the Czarina Natalya Kirilovna¹ and their gowns and capes recalled the sarafan and dushegreika. They seemed to attend these newfangled gatherings with more astonishment than pleasure, and cast looks of resentment at the wives and daughters of the Dutch skippers, who in dimity skirts and red bodices knitted their stockings and laughed and chatted among themselves as if they were at home.

Korsakov was completely bewildered. Observing new arrivals, a servant approached them with beer and glasses on a tray.

Que diable est ce que tout cela? he asked Ibrahim in a whisper.

Ibrahim could not repress a smile. The Empress and the Grand Duchesses, dazzling in their beauty and their attire, walked through the rows of guests conversing affably with them. The Emperor was in another room. Korsakov, wishing to show himself to him, with difficulty succeeded in pushing his way further through the constantly moving crowd. In this room were chiefly foreigners solemnly smoking their clay pipes and draining earthenware mugs. On the tables were bottles of beer and wine, leather pouches with tobacco, glasses of punch, and some chess boards. At one of these Peter was playing draughts with a broad shouldered skipper. They zealously saluted one another with whiffs of tobacco smoke, and the Emperor was so puzzled by an unexpected move that had been made by his opponent that he did not notice Korsakov in spite of the latter's efforts to call attention to himself. Just then a stout gentleman with a large bouquet upon his breast, fussily entered the room, announced in a loud voice that the dancing had commenced and immediately retired. A large number of the guests followed him, Korsakov among them.

An unexpected sight filled him with astonishment. Along the whole length of the ball room to the sound of the most wretched music the ladies and gentlemen stood in two rows facing each other: the gentlemen bowed low, the ladies curtsied still lower, first forward then to the right, then to the left, then again forward again to the right and so on. Korsakov, gazing at this peculiar pastime, opened his eyes wide and bit his lips. The curtsying and bowing continued for about half an hour; at last they ceased and the stout gentleman with the bouquet announced that the ceremonial dances were ended and ordered the musicians to play a minuet. Korsakov rejoiced and prepared to shine. Among the young ladies was one in particular whom he was greatly charmed with. She was about sixteen years of age, was richly dressed but with taste and sat near an elderly gentleman of stern and dignified appearance. Korsakov approached her and asked her to do him the honor of dancing with him. The young beauty looked at him in confusion and did not seem to know what to say to him. The gentleman sitting near her frowned still more. Korsakov awaited her decision but the gentleman with the bouquet came up to him, led him to the middle of the room and said in a pompous manner:

Sir, you have done wrong. In the first place you approached this young person without making the three necessary bows to her and in the second place you took upon yourself to choose her whereas in the minuet that right belongs to the lady and not to the gentleman. On that account you must be severely punished that is to say you must drain the goblet of the Great Eagle.

Korsakov grew more and more astonished. In a moment the guests surrounded him loudly demanding the immediate payment of the penalty. Peter hearing the laughter and the shouting came out of the adjoining room as he was very fond of being present in person at such punishments. The crowd divided before him and he entered the circle where stood the culprit and before him the marshal of the assembly holding in his hands a huge goblet filled with malmsey. He was trying in vain to persuade the offender to comply willingly with the law.

"Aha!" said Peter seeing Korsakov "you are caught brother. Come now monsieur drink and don't make faces."

There was no help for it the poor fop without pausing to take breath drained the goblet and returned it to the marshal.

"Look here Korsakov," said Peter to him "those breeches of yours are of velvet such as I myself do not wear and I am far richer than you. That is extravagance take care that I do not fall out with you."

Hearing this reprimand Korsakov wished to make his way out of the circle but he staggered and almost fell to the indescribable delight of the Emperor and the whole merry company. This episode not only did not spoil the harmony and interest of the principal performance but even enhanced it. The gentlemen began to scrape and bow and the ladies to curtsy and clap their heels together with great zeal and out of time with the music Korsakov could not take part in the general gaiety. The lady whom he had chosen approached Ibrahim at the command of her father Gavril Afanasyevich Rzhevsky and, dropping her blue eyes timidly gave him her hand. Ibrahim danced the minuet with her and led her back to her former place then sought out Korsakov, led him out of the ball room placed him in the carriage and drove him home. On the way Korsakov began to mutter indistinctly

Accursed assembly! accursed goblet of the Great Eagle! but he soon fell into a sound sleep and knew not how he reached home nor how he was undressed and put into bed and he awoke the next day with a headache and with a dim recollection of the scraping the curtseying the tobacco smoke the gentle man with the bouquet, and the goblet of the Great Eagle.

I MUST now introduce the gracious reader to Gavril Afanasyevich Rzhevsky. He was descended from an ancient noble family possessed vast estates was hospitable loved falconry and had a large number of domestics—in a word he was a genuine Russian gentleman. To use his own expression he could not endure the German spirit and he endeavored to preserve in his home the ancient customs that were so dear to him. His daughter was seventeen years old. She had lost her mother while she was yet a child. She had been brought up in the old style that is to say she was surrounded by governesses nurses playmates and maid servants was able to embroider in gold, and could neither read nor write. Her father notwithstanding his dislike of everything foreign could not oppose her wish to learn German dances from a captive Swedish officer living in their house. This deserving dancing master was about fifty years of age; his right foot had been shot through at Narva and consequently it was not capable of performing minuets and courantes but the left executed with wonderful ease and agility the most difficult steps. His pupil did honor to his efforts. Natalya Gavrilovna was celebrated for being the best dancer at the assemblies and this was partly the cause of Korsakov's transgression. He came the next day to apologize to Gavril Afanasyevich but the grace and elegance of the young fop did not find favor in the eyes of the proud boyar who wittily nicknamed him the French monkey.

It was a holiday. Gavril Afanasyevich expected some relatives and friends. In the ancient hall a long table was being laid. The guests were arriving with their wives and daughters who had at last been set free from domestic imprisonment by the decree of the Emperor and by his own example. Natalya Gavrilovna carried round to each guest a silver tray laden with golden cups and each man as he drained his regretted that the kiss which it was customary to receive on such occasions in the olden times had gone out of fashion.

They sat down to table. In the place of honor next to the host sat his father-in-law Prince Boris Alexeyevich Lykov a boyar of seventy years of age; the other guests ranged themselves according to the rank of their family thus recalling the happy times when rules of precedence were generally respected. The men sat on one side the women on the other. At the end of the table the housekeeper in her old-fashioned jacket and head-dress the dwarf a thirty-year-old midget, prim and wrinkled and the captive Swede in his faded blue uniform occupied their accustomed places. The table, which was loaded with a large number of dishes was surrounded by an anxious crowd of domestics, among whom the butler was prominent, thanks to his severe look, big paunch and stately immobility. The first few minutes of the dinner were devoted entirely to the products of our old fashioned cuisine the noise of plates and the rattling of spoons alone disturbed the general silence. At last the host, seeing that the time had arrived for amusing the guests with agreeable conversation turned round and asked

But where is Yekimovna? Call her here

Several servants were about to rush off in different directions but at that moment an old woman powdered and rouged decked out in flowers and tinsel in a low necked silk gown entered, singing and dancing. All were pleased to see her

Good-day, Yekimovna said Prince Lykov how are you?

Quite well and happy, gossip still singing and dancing and looking out for suitors

Where have you been fool? asked the host

Decking myself out gossip for our dear guests for this holy day by the order of the Czar at the command of the boyar in the German style to make you all smile

At these words there was a loud burst of laughter and the fool took her place behind the host's chair

"The fool talks nonsense but sometimes speaks the truth said Tatyana Afanasyevna, the eldest sister of the host for whom he entertained great respect.

I truly, the present fashions are something for all to laugh at. Since you gentlemen have shaved off your beards and put on short castans it is of course, useless to talk about women's fags but it is really a pity about the sarajan the girls' ribbon and the *povorotnik*¹ It is pitiable and at the same time laughable to see the belles of today their hair fluffed up like tow greased and covered with French flour their stomachs laced so tightly that they almost break in two their petticoats are stretched on hoops so that they have to enter a carriage sideways and to go through a door they have to stoop they can neither stand nor sit nor breathe—real martyrs the darlings!

Oh my dear Tatyana Afanasyevna! said Kirila Petrovich T—— a former Governor of Ryazan where he had acquired three thousand erfs and a young wife both by somewhat shady means as far as I am concerned my wife may dress as she pleases she may get herself up like a blowsy peasant woman or like the Chinese Emperor provided that she does not order new dresses every month and throw away the outmoded ones that are nearly new In former times the grandmother's sarafan formed part of the granddaughter's dowry but nowadays all that is changed the dress that the mistress wears today you will see the servant wearing tomorrow What is to be done? It is the ruin of the Russian nobility it's a calamity!

At these words he sighed and looked at his Marya Ilyinishna who did not seem at all to like either his praises of the past or his disparagement of the latest customs The other young ladies shared her displeasure but they remained silent for modesty was then considered an indispensable attribute of a young woman

And who is to blame? said Gavril Afanasyevich filling a tankard with foaming kvass Isn't it our own fault? The young women play the fool and we encourage them

But what can we do when our wishes are not consulted? retorted Kirila Petrovich One would be glad to shut his wife up in the women's rooms but with beating of drums she is summoned to appear at the assemblies. The husband goes after the wife, but the wife after frippery. Oh those assemblies! The Lord has visited us with this punishment for our sins.

Marya Ilyinishna sat as if on needles and pins. Her tongue itched to speak. At last she could restrain herself no longer and turning to her husband she asked him with an acid smile what he found wrong in the assemblies.

"This is what I find wrong in them," replied the husband heatedly, "since they began husbands have been unable to manage their wives. Wives have forgotten the words of the Apostle: Let the wife see that she reverence her husband. They no longer busy themselves about their households but about finery, they do not think of how to please their husbands, but how to attract the attention of giddy officers. And is it becoming, madam, for a Russian lady to associate with tobacco smoking Germans and their charwomen? And was ever such a thing heard of as dancing and talking with young men till far into the night? It would be all very well if it were with relatives but with outsiders with strangers with people that they are totally unacquainted with!"

"I've a word for your ear but the wolf is prowling near," said Gavril Afanasyevich frowning. "I confess that I too dislike these assemblies before you know where you are you knock into a drunken man or are made drunk yourself to become the laughing stock of others. Then you must keep your eyes open for fear that some good for nothing fellow might be up to mischief with your daughter. The young men nowadays are so utterly spoilt. Look for example at the son of the late Yevgraf Sergeyevich Korsakov who at the last assembly made such commotion over Natasha that it brought the blood to my cheeks. The next day I ce somebody driving straight into my courtyard I thought to myself who in the name of Heaven is it can it be Prince Alexander Danilovich? But no it was Ivan Yevgrafovich! He could not stop at the gate and make his way on foot to the steps not he! He flew in bowing and chattering the Lord preserve us! The fool Yekimovna mimics him very amusingly by the way fool give us an imitation of the foreign monkey

The fool Yekimovna seized hold of a dish cover placed it under her arm like a hat and began twisting scap^{pe} and bowing in every direction repeating monieur mamselle assemblee pardon General and prolonged laughter again testified to the delight of the guests

The very spit of Korsakov said old Prince Lykov wiping away the tears of laughter when quiet was again restored But why conceal the fact? He is not the first nor will he be the last who has returned from abroad to holy Russia a buffoon What do our children learn there? To bow and scrape with their feet to chatter God knows what gibberish to treat their elders with disrespect and to dangle after other men's wives Of all the young people who have been educated abroad (the Lord forgive me!) the Czar's Negro most resembles a man

Of course observed Gavril Atanasyevich he is a sober decent man not like that good for nothing

But who is it that has just driven through the gate into the courtyard? Surely it cannot be that foreign monkey again? Why do you stand gaping there beasts? he continued turning to the servants run and tell him he won't be admitted and in future

Old man are you dreaming? interrupted Yekimovna the fool or are you blind? It is the Emperor's sledge—the Czar has come

Gavrila Atanasyevich rose hastily from the table

everybody rushed to the windows, and sure enough they saw the Emperor ascending the steps leaning on his orderly's shoulder. There was great commotion. The host rushed to meet Peter, the servants ran hither and thither as if they had gone crazy, the guests became alarmed, some even thought how they might hasten home as quickly as possible. Suddenly the thundering voice of Peter resounded in the ante-room, all became silent, and the Czar entered, accompanied by his host who was beside himself with joy.

Good day, gentlemen! said Peter, with a cheerful countenance.

All made a profound bow. The sharp eyes of the Czar sought out in the crowd the young daughter of the house, he called her to him. Natalya Gavrilovna advanced boldly enough, but she blushed not only to the ears but even to the shoulders.

You grow prettier from hour to hour, the Emperor said to her, and as was his habit he kissed her on the head. Then turning to the guests, he added, I have disturbed you? You were dining? Pray sit down again and give me some aniseed brandy, Gavril Afanasyevich.

The host rushed to the stately butler, snatched from his hand a tray, filled a golden goblet himself, and gave it with a bow to the Emperor. Peter drank the brandy, ate a biscuit, and for the second time requested the guests to continue their dinner. All resumed their former places, except the dwarf and the housekeeper who did not dare to remain at a table honored by the presence of the Czar. Peter sat down by the side of the host and asked for cabbage soup. The Emperor's order! handed him a wooden spoon mounted with ivory, and a knife and fork with green bone handles, for Peter never used any other table implements but his own. The dinner, which a moment before had been so noisy and merry was now continued in silence and constraint. The host in his delight and awe, ate nothing the guests also stood upon ceremony and listened with respectful attention as the Emperor spoke in German with the captive Swede about the campaign of 1701. The fool Yekimovna several times questioned by the Emperor replied with a sort of timid indifference which by the way did not at all prove her natural stupidity. At last the dinner came to an end. The Emperor rose and after him all the guests.

Gavrila Afanasyevich!" he said to the host. I must speak to you in private and, taking him by the arm he led him into the parlor and locked the door. The guests remained in the dining room talking in whispers about the unexpected visit, and, afraid of being indiscreet they soon drove off one after another without thanking the host for his hospitality. His father-in-law, daughter and sister conducted them very quietly to the door and remained alone in the dining room waiting for the Emperor to emerge.

HALF AN HOUR later the door opened and Peter issued forth. With a dignified inclination of the head he responded to the threefold bow of Prince Lykov, Tatyana Afanasyevna and Natasha and walked straight out into the ante room. The host handed him his red coat, conducted him to the sledge and on the steps thanked him once more for the honor he had shown him.

Peter drove off.

Returning to the dining room Gavrila Afanasyevich seemed very much troubled. He angrily ordered the servants to clear the table as quickly as possible.

sent Natasha to her own room, and, informing his sister and father in law that he must talk with them he led them into the bedroom where he usual'y rested after dinner. The old Prince lay down upon the oak bed. Tatyana Afanasyevna sank into the old brocaded armchair and placed her feet upon the footstool, Gavril Afanasyevich locked all the doors, sat down upon the bed at the feet of Prince Lykov, and in a low voice began

It was not for nothing that the Emperor paid me a visit today—guess what he wanted to talk to me about.

How can we know, brother? said Tatyana Afanasyevna.

Has the Czar appointed you governor of some province? said his father in law—it is high time that he did so. Or has he offered you an ambassador's post? Men of noble birth—not only plain clerks—are sent to foreign monarchs.

No, replied his son in law, frowning. I am a man of the old school, and our services nowadays are not in demand, although, perhaps, an orthodox Russian nobleman is worth more than these modern upstarts, pancake vendors¹ and heathens. But this is a different matter altogether.

Then what was it, brother? said Tatyana Afanasyevna, that he was talking with you about for such a long time? Can it be that you are in trouble? The Lord save and defend us!

Not exactly in trouble, but I confess that it is a matter for reflection.

Then what is it, brother? What is it all about?"

It is about Natasha—the Czar came to speak of a match for her.

God be praised! said Tatyana Afanasyevna, cross-

Who is it then? repeated Prince Lykov, already beginning to doze off

Guess said Gavril Afanasievich

My dear brother replied the old lady how can we guess? There are a great number of eligibles at Court each of whom would be glad to take your Natasha for his wife Is it Dolgoruky?

No it is not Dolgoruky

It's just as well he is much too conceited Is it Shein? Troyekurov?

No neither the one nor the other

I do not care for them either they are flighty and too much imbued with the German spirit Well is it Miloslavsky?

No not he

It's just as well he is rich and stupid Who then? Yeletzky? Lvov? No? It cannot be Raguzinsky? I cannot think of anybody else For whom then does the Czar intend Natasha?

For the Negro Ibrahim

The old lady exclaimed and struck her hands together Prince Lykov raised his head from the pillow and with astonishment repeated

For the Negro Ibrahim?

My dear brother^l said the old lady in a tearful voice do not ruin your own child do not deliver poor little Natasha into the clutches of that black devil

But how replied Gavril Afanasievich can I refuse the Emperor who promises in return to bestow his favor upon us and all our house?

What! exclaimed the old Prince who was now wide awake Natasha my granddaughter to be married to a bought Negro!

He is not of common birth said Gavril Afanas'yevich he is the son of a Negro Sultan The Mussulmen took him prisoner and sold him in Constantinople and our ambassador bought him and presented him to the Czar The Negro's eldest brother came to Russia with a considerable ransom and——

I said that we were under his authority, and that it was our duty to obey him in all things

At that moment a noise was heard behind the door Gavril Afanas'yevich went to open it but felt some obstruction He pushed it hard the door opened and they saw Natasha lying in a swoon upon the blood-stained floor

Her heart had sunk within her, when the Emperor shut himself up with her father some presentiment had whispered to her that the matter concerned her and when Gavril Afanas'yevich ordered her to withdraw saying that he wished to speak to her aunt and grandfather she could not resist the promptings of feminine curiosity stole quietly along through the inner rooms to the bedroom door and did not miss a single word of the whole terrible conversation when he heard her father's last words the poor girl lost consciousness and falling struck her head against an iron-bound chest in which her dowry was kept

Valeryan dear Valeryan my 'fe sa'e me! there they are there they are Tatyana Afanasyevna glanced uneasily at her brother who turned pale but his lips and silently left the room. He returned to the old Prince who unable to mount the stairs had remained below.

How is Natasha? he asked.

Very bad replied the grieved father worse than I thought she is delirious and raves about Valeryan.

Who is this Valeryan? asked the anxious old man.

"Can it be that orphan the son of a *strelets*¹ whom you brought up in your house?"

The same to my misfortune! replied Gavril Afanasyevich. His father at the time of the rebellion saved my life, and the devil put it into my head to take the accursed wolf-cub into my house. When, two years ago he was enrolled in the regiment at his own request Natasha on taking leave of him shed bitter tears and he stood as if petrified. This seemed suspicious to me, and I spoke about it to my sister. But since that time Natasha has never mentioned his name and nothing whatever has been heard of him. I thought that she had forgotten him but apparently this is not the case. It is settled she shall marry the Negro.

Prince Lykov did not contradict him it would have been useless. He returned home. Tatyana Afanasyevna remained by the side of Natasha's bed. Gavril Afanasyevich having sent for the doctor locked himself in his room and the house grew silent and gloomy.

The unexpected proposal astonished Ibrahim quite as much as Gavril Afanasyevich. This is how it hap-

A LAMP shed a soft light on the glass case in which glittered the gold and silver mountings of the old family ikons. The flickering light faintly illuminated the curtained bed and the little table set out with labeled medicine bottles. Near the stove sat a servant maid at her spinning wheel, and the subdued noise of the spindle was the only sound that broke the silence of the room.

Who is there? asked a feeble voice.

The servant maid rose immediately, approached the bed, and gently raised the curtain.

A few minutes afterwards a head in a broad white cap with dark ribbons appeared in the doorway and asked in a low voice

How is Natasha?

How do you do auntie? said the invalid in a faint voice and Tatyana Afanasyevna hastened toward her.

The young lady has come to said the maid carefully drawing a chair to the side of the bed. The old lady with tears in her eyes kissed the pale languid face of her niece and sat down beside her. Just behind her came a German doctor in a black castan and the wig worn by the learned. He felt Natasha's pulse and announced in Latin and then in Russian that the danger was over. He asked for paper and ink wrote out a new prescription and departed. The old lady rose, kissed Natalya once more and immediately hurried down with the good news to Gavril Afanasyevich.

The Czar's Negro in uniform wearing his sword and carrying his hat in his hand sat in the drawing room with Gavril Afanasyevich Korsakov stretched out upon a soft couch was listening to their conversation and teasing a venerable greyhound. Becoming tired of this occupation he approached the mirror the usual refuge of the idle and in it he saw Tatyana Afanasyevna who through the doorway was vainly signaling to her brother.

Someone is calling you Gavril Afanasyevich said Korsakov turning round to him and interrupting Ibrahim's speech.

Gavril Afanasyevich immediately went to his sister and closed the door behind him.

I am astonished at your patience said Korsakov to Ibrahim 'For a full hour you have been listening to a lot of nonsense about the antiquity of the I ykov and Rzhevsky lineage and have even added your own moral observations! In your place j aurais plante la the old inn and his whole tribe, including Natalya Gavrilovna who puts on airs, and is only pretending to be ill—une petite santé Tell me candidly are you really in love with this little misauree?

No replied Ibrahim I am not going to marry for love I am going to make a marriage of convenience, and then only if she has no decided aversion to me

Listen, Ibrahim said Korsakov follow my advice this time in truth I am more sensible than I seem Get this foolish idea out of your head—don't marry It seems to me that your bride has no particular liking for you Don't all sorts of things happen in this world? For instance I am certainly not a bad looking fellow myself and yet it has happened to me to deceive husbands who Lord knows, were in no way worse looking than me And you yourself do you remember our Parisian friend Count D——? There is no dependence to be placed upon a woman's fidelity happy is he who can regard it with indifference But you!

With your passionate pensive and suspicious nature with your flat nose thick lips, and coarse wool to rush into all the dangers of matrimony!

I thank you for your friendly advice interrupted Ibrahim coldly "but you know the proverb It is not your duty to rock other people's children

Take care Ibrahim replied Korsakov, laughing that you are not called upon some day to prove the truth of that proverb in the literal sense of the word

Meanwhile the conversation in the next room became very heated

You will kill her the old lady was saying "she cannot bear the sight of him

But judge for yourself replied her obstinate broth er For a fortnight he has been coming here as her bridegroom and during that time he has not once seen his bride He may think at last that her illness is a mere pretention and that we are only seeking to gain time in order to rid ourselves of him in some way And what will the Czar say? He has already sent three times to ask after the health of Natalya Do as you like but I have no intention of quarreling with him

Good Lord! said Tatyana Afanasyevna what will become of the poor child! At least let me go and prepare her for such a visit

Gavrila Afanasyevich consented and then returned to the parlor

Thank God! said he to Ibrahim the danger is over Natalya is much better Were it not that I do not like to leave my dear guest Ivan Yeografovich here alone I would take you upstairs to have a glimpse of your bride

Korsakov congratulated Gavrila Afanasyevich asked him not to be uneasy on his account assured him that he was compelled to go at once and rushed out into the hall without allowing his host to accompany him

Meanwhile Tatyana Afanasyevna hastened to prepare the invalid for the appearance of the terrible guest Entering the room she sat down breathless by the side of the bed, and took Natasha by the hand but before she was able to utter a word the door opened

Natasha asked Who has come in?

The old lady turned faint Gavrila Afanasyevich drew back the curtain looked coldly at the sick girl, and asked how she was The invalid wanted to smile at him but could not Her father's stern look struck her, and uneasiness took possession of her At that moment it seemed to her that someone was standing at the head of her bed She raised her head with an effort and suddenly recognized the Czar's Negro Then she remembered everything, and all the horror of the future presented itself to her. But she was too exhausted to be perceptibly shocked. Natasha laid her head down again upon the pillow and closed her eyes. Her heart beat painfully. Tatyana Afanasyevna made a sign to her brother that the invalid wanted to go to sleep, and all quitted the room very quietly, except the maid, who resumed her seat at the spinning wheel.

The unhappy girl opened her eyes, and no longer seeing anybody by her bedside, called the maid and sent her for the dwarf. But at that moment a round, old figure rolled up to her bed like a ball. Lastochka (for so the dwarf was called) with all the speed of her short legs had followed Gavril Afanasyevich and Ibrahim up the stairs and concealed herself behind the door in accordance with the promptings of that curiosity which is inborn in the fair sex. Natasha seeing her sent the maid away and the dwarf sat down upon a stool by the bedside.

Never had so small a body contained within itself so much energy. She meddled in everything, knew everything, and busied herself about everything. By cunning and insinuating ways she had succeeded in gaining the love of her masters and the hatred of all the household, which she controlled in the most autocratic manner. Gavril Afanasyevich listened to her tale bearing complaint, and petty requests. Tatyana Afanasyevna constantly asked her opinion and followed her advice and Natasha had the most unbounded affection for her and confided to her all the thoughts, all the emotions of her sixteen-year-old heart.

"Do you know, Lastochka," said she, "my father is going to marry me to the Negro."

The dwarf sighed deeply and her wrinkled face became still more wrinkled.

Is there no hope? continued Natasha will my father not take pity upon me?

The dwarf shook her cap

Will not my grandfather or my aunt intercede for me?

No miss during your illness the Negro succeeded in bewitching everybody The master dotes upon him the Prince raves about him alone and Tatyana Atinas yevna says it is a pity that he is a Negro as a better bridegroom we could not wish for

My God my God! moaned poor Natasha

Do not grieve my pretty one, said the dwarf kissing her feeble hand If you are to marry the Negro you will have your own way in everything Nowad iys it is not as it was in the olden times husbands no longer keep their wives under lock and key they say the Negro is rich you will have a splendid house—you will lead a merry life

Poor Valeryan! said Natasha but so softly that the dwarf could only guess what she said rather than hear the words

That is just it miss said she mysteriously lowering her voice if you thought less of the strelets or phan you would not rave about him in your delirium and your father would not be angry

What! said the alarmed Natasha I have raved about Valeryan? And my father heard it? And my father is angry?

That is just the trouble replied the dwarf Now if you were to ask him not to marry you to the Negro he would think that Valeryan was the cause There is nothing to be done submit to the will of your parents for what is to be will be

Natasha did not reply The thought that the secret of her heart was known to her father produced a powerful effect upon her imagination. One hope alone remained to her—to die before the consummation of the odious marriage. This thought consoled her. Weak and sad at heart she resigned herself to her fate.

IN THE house of Gavnila Afanasyevich to the right of the vestibule was a narrow room with one window. In it stood a simple bed covered with a woolen counterpane. In front of the bed was a small deal table on which a tallow candle was burning, and some sheets of music lay open. On the wall hung an old blue uniform and its contemporary, a three-cornered hat; above it, fastened by three nails, was a cheap print representing Charles XII on horseback. The notes of a flute resounded through this humble abode. The captive dancing-master, its lonely occupant, in a night-cap and nankeen dressing-gown, was relieving the tedium of a winter evening by playing some old Swedish marches which reminded him of the gay days of his youth. After devoting two whole hours to this exercise, the Swede took his flute to pieces, placed it in a box, and began to undress.

Just then the latch of his door was lifted and a tall handsome young man in uniform entered the room. The Swede rose, surprised.

You do not recognize me, Gustav Adamych, said the young visitor in a moved voice. You do not remember the boy to whom you used to give military instruction, and with whom you nearly started a fire in this very room, shooting off a toy cannon.

Gustav Adamych looked closely.

Eh, eh, he cried at last, embracing him. Greetings! How long have you been here? Sit down, you scapegrace, let us talk.

DUBROVSKY

SOME years ago there lived on one of his estates a Russian gentleman of the old school named Kirila Petrovich Troyekurov. His wealth distinguished birth and connections gave him great weight in the provinces where his estates were situated. The neighbors were ready to gratify his slightest whim; the government officials trembled at his name. Kirila Petrovich accepted all these signs of obsequiousness as his rightful due. His house was always full of guests ready to indulge his lordship in his hours of idleness and to share his noisy and sometimes boisterous mirth. Nobody dared to refuse his invitations or, on certain days, omit to put in an appearance at the village of Pokrovskoye. In his home circle Kirila Petrovich exhibited all the vices of an uneducated man. Spoilt by all who surrounded him, he was in the habit of giving way to every impulse of his passionate nature, to every caprice of his somewhat narrow mind. In spite of the extraordinary vigor of his constitution, he suffered two or three times a week from surfeit and became tipsy every evening.

Very few of the serf girls in his household escaped

In the original MS. the first eight chapters are called volume I the rest—volume II

the amorous attempts of this fifty year-old satyr. More over in one of the wings of his house lived sixteen girls engaged in needlework. The windows of this wing were protected by wooden bars the doors were kept locked and the keys retained by Kirila Petrovich. The young recluses at an appointed hour went into the garden for a walk under the surveillance of two old women. From time to time Kirila Petrovich married some of them off and newcomers took their places. He treated his peasants and domestics in a severe and arbitrary fashion in spite of which they were very devoted to him they loved to boast of the wealth and influence of their master and in their turn took many a liberty with their neighbors trusting to his powerful protection.

Troyekurov's usual occupations were driving over his vast domains, feasting at length, and playing practical jokes invented newly every day the victims being generally new acquaintances, though his old friends did not always escape one only—Andrey Gavrilovich Dubrovsky—excepted.

This Dubrovsky a retired lieutenant of the Guards was his nearest neighbor and the owner of seventy serfs. Troyekurov haughty in his dealings with people of the highest rank respected Dubrovsky in spite of his humble situation. They had been in the service together and Troyekurov knew from experience his impatient and resolute character. Circumstances separated them for a long time. Dubrovsky with his reduced fortune, was compelled to leave the service and settle down in the only village that remained to him. Kirila Petrovich hearing of this offered him his protection but Dubrovsky thanked him and remained poor and independent. Some years later Troyekurov having retired with the rank of general arrived at his estate. They met again and were delighted with each other. After that they saw each other every day and Kirila Petrovich who had never deigned to visit anybody in his life came quite without ceremony to the modest house of his old comrade. In some respects their fates had been similar both had married for love, both had soon become widowers and both had been left with an only child. The son of Dubrovsky was being brought up in Petersburg, the daughter of Kirila Petrovich was growing up under the eyes of her father, and Trojekurov often said to Dubrovsky

Listen brother Andrey Gavrilovich if your Volodka should turn out well I will let him have Masha for his wife in spite of his being as poor as a church mouse

Andrey Gavrilovich used to shake his head and generally replied

No Kirila Petrovich my Volodka is no match for Marya Kirilovna. A penniless gentleman such as he, would do better to marry a poor girl of the gentry and be the head of his house, rather than become the bailiff of some spoilt baggage

Everybody envied the good understanding existing between the haughty Trojekurov and his poor neighbor, and wondered at the boldness of the latter when at the table of Kirila Petrovich, he expressed his own opinion frankly and did not hesitate to maintain an opinion contrary to that of his host. Some attempted to imitate him and ventured to overstep the limits of due respect but Kirila Petrovich taught them such a lesson that they never afterward felt any desire to repeat the experiment. Dubrovsky alone remained beyond the range of this general law. But an accidental occurrence upset and altered all this

One day in the beginning of autumn, Kirila Petrovich prepared to go out hunting. Orders had been given the evening before for the whips and huntsmen to be ready at five o'clock in the morning. The tent and kitchen had been sent on beforehand to the place where Kirila Petrovich was to dine. The host and his guests went to the kennels where more than five hundred harriers and greyhounds lived in luxury and warmth, praising the generosity of Kirila Petrovich in their canine language. There was also a hospital for the sick dogs under the care of staff surgeon Timoshka and a separate place where the pedigreed bitches brought forth and suckled their pups. Kirila Petrovich was proud of this magnificent establishment and never missed an opportunity of boasting about it before his guests, each of whom had inspected it at least twenty times. He walked through the kennels, surrounded by his guests and accompanied by Timoshka and the head whips, pausing before certain kennels either to ask after the health of some sick dog, to make some observation more or less just and severe, or to call some dog to him by name and speak tenderly to it. The guests considered it their duty to go into raptures over Kirila Petrovich's kennels. Dubrovsky alone remained silent and frowned. He was an ardent sportsman, but his modest fortune only permitted him to keep two harriers and one pack of greyhounds, and he could not restrain a certain feeling of envy at the sight of this magnificent establishment.

Why do you frown, brother? Kirila Petrovich asked him. Don't you like my kennels?

No, replied Dubrovsky abruptly, the kennels are marvelous; indeed I doubt whether your men live as well as your dogs.

One of the whips took offence.

'Thanks to God and our master we don't complain of the way we live,' said he, 'but if the truth must be told, there is many a gentleman who would not do badly if he exchanged his manor house for any one of these kennels he would be better fed and warmer

Kirila Petrovich burst out laughing at his servant's insolent remark and the guests followed his example although they felt that the whip's joke might apply to them also. Dubrovsky turned pale and said not a word. At that moment a basket containing some new born puppies was brought to Kirila Petrovich he busied himself with them choosing two for himself and ordering the rest to be drowned. In the meantime Andrey Gavrilovich had disappeared without anybody having observed it.

On returning with his guests from the kennels Kirila Petrovich sat down to supper and it was only then that he noticed the absence of Dubrovsky. His people informed him that Andrey Gavrilovich had gone home. Troyekurov immediately gave orders that he was to be overtaken and brought back without fail. He had never gone hunting without Dubrovsky who was a great connoisseur in all matters relating to dogs and an infallible umpire in all possible disputes connected with sport. The servant who had galloped after him returned while they were still seated at table and informed his master that Andrey Gavrilovich had refused to listen to him and would not return. Kirila Petrovich as usual was heated with liquor and becoming very angry he sent the same servant a second time to tell Andrey Gavrilovich that if he did not return at once to spend the night at Pokrovskoye he Troyekurov would never have anything further to do with him. The servant galloped off again. Kirila Petrovich rose from the table dismissed his guests and retired to bed.

The next day his first question was 'Is Andrey Gavrilovich here?' By way of answer he was handed a let ter folded in the shape of a triangle Kirila Petrovich ordered his secretary to read it aloud and he heard the following

"Gracious Sir!

I do not intend to return to Pokrovskoye until you send the whip Paramoshka to me with an apology and it shall be for me to decide whether to punish or forgive him. I do not intend to put up with jokes from your servants or for that matter from you as I am not a buffoon but a gentleman of ancient lineage. I remain your obedient servant

Andrey Dubrovsky

According to present ideas of etiquette, such a letter would be very unbecoming, yet it irritated Kirila Petrovich not by its strange style and form but by its substance.

What! thundered Trojekurov, jumping barefooted out of bed—send my people to him with an apology! And he to decide whether to punish or pardon them! What can he be thinking of? He doesn't know with whom he is dealing! I'll show him what's what! I'll give him something to cry about! He shall know what it is to oppose Trojekurov!

Kirila Petrovich dressed himself and set out for the hunt with his usual ostentation but the chase was not successful during the whole of the day one hare only was seen and that escaped. The dinner in the field under the tent was also a failure or at least it was not to the taste of Kirila Petrovich who struck the cook, abused the guests, and on the return journey rode intentionally with all his suite through Dubrovsky's fields.

II

SEVERAL days passed and the animosity between the two neighbors did not subside. Andrey Gavrilovich returned no more to Pokrovskoye, and Kirila Petrovich bored without him vented his spleen in the most insulting expressions which thanks to the zeal of the neighboring gentry reached Dubrovsky revised and augmented. A fresh incident destroyed the last hope of a reconciliation.

One day Dubrovsky was driving around his little property when on approaching a grove of birch trees he heard the blows of an axe and a minute afterward the crash of a falling tree he hastened to the spot and found some of the Pokrovskoye peasants calmly stealing his timber. Seeing him they took to flight but Dubrovsky with the assistance of his coachman caught two of them whom he brought home bound. Moreover two horses belonging to the enemy fell into the hands of the victor.

Dubrovsky was exceedingly angry. Before this Trojekurov's people who were well known robbers had never dared to do any mischief within the boundaries of his property being aware of the friendship which existed between him and their master. Dubrovsky now perceived that they were taking advantage of the rupture which had occurred between him and his neighbor and he resolved contrary to all ideas of the rules of war to teach his prisoners a lesson with the rod which they themselves had collected in his grove and to send the horses to work adding them to his own live stock.

The news of these proceedings reached the ears of Kirila Petrovich that very day. He was almost beside himself and in the first moment of his rage, he wanted to take all of his domestics and make an attack upon Kistenyovka (for such was the name of his neighbor's village) raze it to the ground, and besiege the land holder in his own manor. Such exploits were not rare with him, but his thoughts soon took another direction. Pacing with heavy steps up and down the hall, he glanced casually out of the window and saw a troika stopping at his gate. A little man in a leather traveling cap and a frieze cloak stepped out of the carriage and proceeded toward the wing occupied by the bailiff. Troyekurov recognized the assessor Shabashkin and gave orders for him to be sent in to him. A minute afterward Shabashkin stood before Kirila Petrovich and bowing repeatedly waited respectfully to hear his orders.

Good day—what is your name anyway? said Troyekurov. What has brought you here?

I was going to town. Your Excellency replied Shabashkin, and I called on Ivan Deniyanov to find out if there were any orders from Your Excellency.

You have come just at the right time—whatever your name is I have need of you. Have some vodka and listen to me.

Such a friendly welcome agreeably surprised the assessor; he declined the vodka and listened to Kirila Petrovich with all possible attention.

I have a neighbor, said Troyekurov, a small proprietor, a rude fellow, and I want to take his property away from him. What do you think of that?

Your Excellency, are there any documents or . . . ?

Don't talk nonsense, brother, what documents are you talking about? Ukases will take care of them. The point is to take his property away from him in spite of the law. But stop! This estate belonged to us at one time. It was bought from a certain Spitzyn and then sold to Dubrovsky's father. Can't you make a case out of that?

It would be difficult. Your Excellency probably the sale was effected in strict accordance with the law.

I think, brother, try your hardest.

If, for example, Your Excellency could in some way obtain from your neighbor the deed in virtue of which he holds possession of his estate, then, of course,

I understand, but that is the trouble: all his papers were burnt at the time of the fire.

What! Your Excellency, his papers were burnt? What could be better? In that case, take proceedings according to law, without the slightest doubt you will receive complete satisfaction.

You think so? Well, see to it. I rely upon your zeal, and you can rest assured of my gratitude.

Shabashkin, bowing almost to the ground, took his departure. At once he began to occupy himself with the business intrusted to him, and thanks to his prompt action, exactly a fortnight afterward Dubrovsky received from town a summons to appear in court and to produce the documents in virtue of which he held possession of the village of Kistenyovka.

Andrey Gavrilovich, greatly astonished by this unexpected request, wrote that very same day a somewhat rude reply in which he explained that the village of Kistenyovka became his on the death of his father, that he held it by right of inheritance, that Troyelurov had nothing to do with the matter, and that anyone else's claim to this property of his was nothing but chicanery and fraud.

This letter produced a very agreeable impression on the mind of Shabashkin. He saw, in the first place, that Dubrovsky knew very little about legal matters, and in the second, that it would not be difficult to place such a rash and hot tempered man in a very disadvantageous position

Andrey Gavrilovich after a more careful consideration of the questions addressed to him saw the necessity of replying more circumstantially. He wrote a sufficiently businesslike letter but this ultimately proved insufficient also. Dubrovsky had no experience in litigation. He generally followed the dictates of common sense a guide rarely safe, and nearly always insufficient.

The business dragged on. Confident of being in the right Andrey Gavrilovich troubled himself very little about the matter he had neither the inclination nor the means to scatter money about and although he was always the first to poke fun at the venality of the scribbling fraternity the idea of being made the victim of chicanery never entered his head. Troyekurov on his side thought as little of winning the case he had started. Shabashkin took the matter in hand for him acting in his name, intimidating and bribing the judges and quoting and interpreting various ukases in the most distorted manner possible.

At last, on the 6th day of February, in the year 18—, Dubrovsky received through the town police, an invitation to appear at the district Court to hear the decision in the matter of the disputed property between himself—Lieutenant Dubrovsky—and General Troyekurov and to signify his approval or disapproval of the verdict. That same day Dubrovsky set out for town. On the road he was overtaken by Troyekurov. They glared haughtily at each other and Dubrovsky observed a malicious smile upon the face of his adversary.

Arriving in town Andrey Gavrilovich stopped at the house of an acquaintance a merchant where he spent the night and the next morning he appeared before the Court. Nobody paid any attention to him. After him arrived Kirila Petrovich. The clerks rose and stuck their pens behind their ears, while the members of the Court received him with every sign of abject obsequiousness and an arm-chair was offered him out of consideration for his rank, years and corpulence. He sat down. Andrey Gavrilovich stood leaning against the wall. A deep silence ensued and the secretary began in a sonorous voice to read the decree of the Court.

We cite it in full believing that everyone will be pleased to see one of the ways in which we in Russia may lose an estate to which we have an indisputable right¹.

When the secretary had ceased reading the assessor arose and with a low bow turned to Troyekurov inviting him to sign the paper which he held out to him. Troyekurov quite triumphant took the pen and wrote beneath the decision of the Court a statement signifying his complete satisfaction with it.

It was now Dubrovsky's turn. The secretary handed the paper to him but Dubrovsky stood immovable, with his head bowed. The secretary repeated his invitation. To signify his full and complete satisfaction or his manifest dissatisfaction if he felt in his conscience that his case was just, and intended at the time stipulated by law to appeal against the decision of the Court.

Dubrovsky remained silent. Suddenly he raised his head his eyes flashed he stamped his foot pushed back the secretary with such force that he fell seized the inkstand and hurled it at the assessor. Everyone was horrified.

What! Dubrovsky shouted "Not to respect the Church of God! Out with you you spawn of Ham!

Then turning to Kirila Petrovich

¹The lengthy court decree which abounds in all the technicalities of a legal document, is omitted here. EDITORIAL NOTE

Has such a thing ever been heard of Your Excellency? he continued. The whips bring dogs into the Church of God! The dogs are running about the church! I will teach you a lesson!

The guards rushed in on hearing the noise, and with difficulty overpowered him. They led him out and placed him in a sledge. Troyekurov went out after him accompanied by the whole Court. Dubrovsky's sudden madness had produced a deep impression upon his imagination and poisoned his triumph. The judges who had counted upon his gratitude did not receive a single affable word from him. He returned immediately to Pokrovskoye. Dubrovsky in the mean time lay in bed. The district doctor—not altogether a blockhead—bled him and applied leeches and fly blisters to him. Toward evening he began to feel better and the next day he was taken to Kistenyovka, which scarcely belonged to him any longer.

III

SOME time elapsed but poor Dubrovsky's health showed no signs of improvement. It was true that the fits of madness did not recur but his strength was visibly failing. He abandoned his former occupations, rarely left his room and for days together remained absorbed in his own reflections. Yegorovna, a kind hearted old woman who had once tended his son now became his nurse. She waited upon him as though he were a child, reminded him when it was time to eat and sleep, fed him and put him to bed. Andrey Gavrilovich obeyed her and had no dealings with anybody else. He was not in a condition to think about his affairs or to look after his property and Yegorovna saw the necessity of informing young Dubrovsky, who was then serving in one of the regiments of Foot Guards stationed in St. Petersburg of everything that had happened. And so tearing a leaf from the account book she dictated to Khariton the cook the only literate person in Kistenyovka a letter which she sent off that same day to town to be posted.

But it is time to acquaint the reader with the real hero of our story.

Vladimir Dubrovsky had been educated at the cadet school and on leaving it had entered the Guards as sub lieutenant. His father spared nothing that was necessary to enable him to live in a becoming manner and the young man received from home a great deal more than he had any right to expect. Being imprudent and ambitious he indulged in extravagant habits played cards ran into debt and troubled himself very little about the future. Occasionally the thought crossed his mind that sooner or later he would be obliged to take to himself a rich bride the dream of every poverty stricken youth.

One evening when several officers were visiting him lolling on couches and smoking his amber pipes Grishin his valet handed him a letter the address and seal of which immediately struck the young man. He hastily opened it and read the following.

Our Master Vladimir Andreyevich I your old nurse have decided to report to you regarding your father's health. He is very poorly sometimes he wanders in his talk and the whole day long he sits like a foolish child—but life and death are in the hands of God. Come to us my bright little falcon and we will send horses to meet you at Pesochkovo. We hear that the Court is going to hand us over to Kirila Petrovich Troyekurov because it is said that we belong to him although we have always belonged to you and have always heard so ever since we can remember You might living in St Petersburg inform our father the Czar of this and he will not allow us to be wronged I remain your faithful servant nurse Arina Yegorovna Buzireta

I send my maternal blessing to Grisha does he serve you well? It has been raining here for the last fortnight and Rodya the shepherd died about St Nicholas day

Vladimir Dubrovsky read these somewhat confused lines several times with great agitation. He had lost his mother during his childhood, and hardly knowing his father had been taken to St Petersburg when he was eight years of age. In spite of that he was romantically attached to his father, and having had but little opportunity of enjoying the pleasures of family life he loved it all the more in consequence.

The thought of losing his father pained him exceedingly and the condition of the poor invalid which he guessed from his nurse's letter horrified him. He imagined his father, left in an out-of-the-way village in the hands of a stupid old woman and the domestics threatened with some misfortune and fading away helplessly in the midst of mental and physical tortures. Vladimir reproached himself with criminal neglect. Not having received any news of his father for a long time he had not thought of making inquiries about him supposing him to be traveling about or absorbed in the management of his estate. He decided to go to him and even to retire from the army should his father's condition require his presence at his side. Seeing that he was upset his friends left. Once alone Vladimir wrote an application for leave of absence lit his pipe and sank into deep thought. That same evening he began to take further steps for obtaining leave of absence and two days afterward he set out in a stage coach accompanied by his faithful Grisha

Vladimir Andreyevich neared the post station at which he was to take the turning for Kistenyovka. His heart was filled with sad forebodings; he feared that he would no longer find his father alive. He pictured to himself the dreary kind of life that awaited him in the village: the desolation, solitude, poverty and cares connected with business of which he did not understand a thing. Arriving at the station, he went to the postmaster and asked for horses. The postmaster, having inquired where he was going, informed him that horses sent from Kistenyovka had been waiting for him for the last four days. Before Vladimir Andreyevich there soon appeared the old coachman Anton, who used formerly to take him over the stables and look after his pony. Anton's eyes filled with tears on seeing his young master, and bowing to the ground, he told him that his old master was still alive, and then rushed off to harness the horses. Vladimir Andreyevich declined the proffered meal and hastened to depart. Anton drove him along the cross-country roads, and conversation began between them.

Tell me, if you please, Anton, what is this business between my father and Troyekurov?

God knows, little father Vladimir Andreyevich, the master, they say, fell out with Kirila Petrovich, and the latter went to law about it, though often he takes the law into his own hands. It is not the business of us servants to have a say about what our masters please to do, but God knows that your father had no business to go against the will of Kirila Petrovich; it's no use butting your head against a wall.

It seems, then, that this Kirila Petrovich does just what he pleases with you?

He certainly does, master—he does not care a rap for the assessor—and the police officer is his errand boy. The gentry kowtow to him, for as the proverb says: Where there is a trough, there will the pigs be also.

Is it true that he is taking our estate from us?

Oh, master, that is what we have heard. The other day the sexton from Pokrovskoye said at the christening held at the house of our overseer: You've had it easy long enough. Kirila Petrovich will soon take you in hand—and Mikita the blacksmith said to him: Save! don't distress the godfather, don't disturb the guests. Kirila Petrovich is for himself, and Andrey Gavrilovich is for himself—and we are all God's and the Czar's. But you cannot sew a button upon another person's mouth.

Then you do not wish to pass into the possession of Troyekurov?

Into the possession of Kirila Petrovich! The Lord save and preserve us! His own people fare badly enough, and if he got possession of strangers he would strip off not only the skin, but the flesh also. No, may God grant long life to Andrey Gavrilovich, and if God should take him to Himself, we want nobody but you, our provider. Do not give us up, and we will stand by you.

With these words Anton flourished his whip, shook the reins, and the horses broke into a brisk trot.

Touched by the devotion of the old coachman, Dubrovsky became silent and gave himself up to his own reflections. More than an hour passed, suddenly Grisha roused him by exclaiming: There is Pokrovskoye! Dubrovsky raised his head. They were just then driving along the bank of a broad lake, out of which flowed a small stream which was lost to sight among the hills. On one of these, above a thick green wood, rose the green roof and belvedere of a huge stone house, and on another a church with five cupolas and an ancient belfry round about were scattered the village huts with their kitchen gardens and wells. Dubrovsky recognized these places—he remembered that on that very hill he had played with little Masha Troyekurov who was two years younger than he and who even then gave promise of being a beauty. He wanted to make inquiries of Anton about her but a certain bashfulness restrained him.

As they drove past the manor house he noticed a white dress flitting among the trees in the garden. At that moment Anton whipped the horses and impelled by that vanity common to village coachmen as to drivers in general he drove it full speed over the bridge and past the village. On emerging from the village they ascended the hill and Vladimir perceived the little birch grove and to the left in an open place a small gray house with a red roof. His heart began to beat—before him was Kistenzyovka and the humble house of his father.

About ten minutes afterwards he drove into the courtyard. He looked around him with indescribable emotion—it was twelve years since he had last seen his birthplace. The little birches which had just then been planted near the wooden fence had now become tall spreading trees. The courtyard formerly ornamented with three regular flower beds between which ran a broad path carefully swept had been converted into a meadow in which was grazing a tethered horse. The dogs began to bark but recognizing Anton they stopped and wagged their shaggy tails. The servants came rushing out of the house and surrounded the young master with loud manifestations of joy. It was with difficulty that he was able to make his way through the enthusiastic crowd. He ran up the rickety steps—in the vestibule he was met by Yegorovna who tearfully embraced him.

"How do you do how do you do nurse?" he re peated, pressing the good old woman to his heart

And father? Where is he? How is he?

At that moment a tall old man pale and thin in a dressing gown and cap entered the room dragging one foot after the other with difficulty

How are you Volodka? said he in a weak voice and Vladimir embraced his father warmly

The joy proved too much for the sick man, he grew weak, his legs gave way beneath him and he would have fallen if his son had not held him up

Why did you get out of bed?" said Yegorovna to him He cannot keep on his feet, and yet he wants to behave just like anybody

The old man was carried back to his bedroom He tried to converse with his son but he could not collect his thoughts and his words were incoherent He became silent and fell into a kind of doze Vladimir was struck by his condition He installed himself in the bedroom and requested to be left alone with his father The household obeyed and then all turned toward Grisha and led him away to the servants hall where they regaled him with a hearty meal according to the rustic custom and entertained him hospitably, wearying him with questions and greetings

There is a coffin where the festive board was spread

A FEW days after his arrival, young Dubrovsky wished to turn his attention to business but his father was not in a condition to give him the necessary explanations and there was no one in charge of Andrey Gavrilovich's affairs Examining his papers Vladimir only found the first letter of the assessor and a rough copy of his father's reply to it. From these he could not obtain any clear idea of the lawsuit, and he determined to await the result, trusting in the justice of their cause.

Meanwhile the health of Andrey Gavrilovich grew worse from hour to hour. Vladimir foresaw that his end was not far off, and he never left the old man, who was now in his second childhood.

In the meantime the term for appealing the case had elapsed and nothing had been done. Kistenyovka now belonged to Trojekurov. Shabashkin came to him, and with a profusion of salutations and congratulations inquired when His Excellency intended to enter into possession of his newly acquired property—would he go and do so himself, or would he deign to commission somebody else to act as his representative?

Kirila Petrovich was troubled. By nature he was not avaricious; his desire for revenge had carried him too far, and now his conscience pricked him. He knew in what condition his adversary, the old comrade of his youth, was, and his victory brought no joy to his heart. He glared sternly at Shabashkin, seeking for some pretext to give him a dressing down, but not finding a suitable one, he said to him in an angry tone:

Get out! I'm in no mood to see you!

Shabashkin, seeing that he was in a bad humor, bowed and hastened to withdraw, and Kirila Petrovich, left alone, began to pace up and down, whistling.

Thunder of victory resound! which with him was always a sure sign of unusual agitation of mind.

At last he gave orders for the droshky to be got ready, wrapped himself up warmly (it was already the end of September), and, himself holding the reins, drove away.

He soon caught sight of Andrey Gavrilovich's little house. Contradictory feelings filled his soul. Satisfied vengeance and love of power had, to a certain extent, deadened his more noble sentiments, but at last these latter prevailed. He resolved to effect a reconciliation with his old neighbor to efface the traces of the quarrel and restore to him his property. Having eased his soul with this good intention, Kirila Petrovich set off at a gallop toward the residence of his neighbor and drove straight into the courtyard.

At that moment the invalid was sitting at his bedroom window. He recognized Kirila Petrovich—and his face assumed a look of violent agitation: a livid flush replaced his usual pallor; his eyes gleamed and he uttered unintelligible sounds. His son, who was sitting there examining the account books, raised his head and was struck by the change in his father's condition. The sick man pointed with his finger toward the courtyard with an expression of rage and horror. At that moment the voice and heavy tread of Yegorovna were heard.

Master, master! Kirila Petrovich has come! Kirila Petrovich is on the steps! she cried. Good God! What is the matter? What has happened to him?

Andrey Gavrilovich had hastily gathered up the skirts of his dressing gown and was preparing to rise from his arm-chair. He succeeded in getting upon his feet—and then suddenly collapsed. His son rushed toward him; the old man lay insensible and without breathing; he had had a stroke.

Quick, quick! send to town for a doctor! cried Vladimir.

"Kirila Petrovich is asking for you," said a servant, entering the room.

Vladimir gave him a terrible look.

Tell Kirila Petrovich to take himself off as quickly as possible before I have him turned out—go!

The servant gladly left the room to execute his master's orders. Yegorovna struck her hands together.

Master, she exclaimed in a piping voice, you will do for yourself! Kirila Petrovich will devour us all!"

Silence, nurse said Vladimir angrily send Anton to town at once for a doctor

Yegorovna left the room There was nobody in the ante-chamber all the domestics had run out into the courtyard to look at Kirila Petrovich She went out on the steps and heard the servant deliver his young master's word Kirila Petrovich heard it, seated in the droshky his face became darker than night he smiled contemptuously looked threateningly at the assembled domestics and then drove slowly out of the courtyard He glanced up at the window where a minute before Andrey Gavrilovich had been sitting but he was no longer there The nurse remained standing on the steps forgetful of her master's order The domestics were noisily talking of what had just occurred Suddenly Vladimir appeared in the midst of them and said abruptly

There is no need for a doctor—father is dead!

General consternation followed The domestics rushed to the room of their old master He was lying in the arm-chair in which Vladimir had placed him his right arm hung down to the floor his head was sunk on his chest—there was not the least sign of life in his body which although not yet cold was already disfigured by death Yegorovna set up a wail The domestics surrounded the corpse, which was left to their care, washed it dressed it in a uniform made in the year 1797 and laid it out on the same table at which for so many years they had waited upon their master

THE funeral took place on the third day The body of the poor old man lay in the coffin covered with a shroud and surrounded by candles. The dining room was filled with domestics ready to carry out the corpse. Vladimir and three servants raised the coffin. The priest went in front followed by the deacon chanting the prayers for the dead. The master of Kistenyovka crossed the threshold of his house for the last time. The coffin was carried through the wood—the church lay just behind it. The day was clear and cold; the autumn leaves were falling from the trees. On emerging from the wood they saw before them the wooden church of Kistenyovka and the cemetery shaded by old lime trees. There reposed the body of Vladimir's mother; there beside her tomb a new grave had been dug the day before.

The church was full of the Kistenyovka peasantry, come to render the last homage to their master. Young Dubrovsky stood in the chancel; he neither wept nor prayed, but the expression on his face was terrible. The sad ceremony came to an end. Vladimir approached first to take leave of the corpse; after him came the domestics. The lid was brought and nailed upon the coffin. The women wailed loudly, and the men frequently wiped away their tears with their fists. Vladimir and three of the servants carried the coffin to the cemetery, accompanied by the whole village. The coffin was lowered into the grave; all present threw upon it a handful of earth; the pit was filled up; the crowd saluted for the last time and then dispersed. Vladimir hastily departed, got ahead of everybody, and disappeared into the Kistenyovka wood.

Yegorovna, in her master's name, invited the priest and all the clergy to a funeral feast, informing them that her young master did not intend being present.

Then Father Anton, his wife Fedotovna, and the deacon set out on foot for the manor house, discoursing with Yegorovna upon the virtues of the deceased.

and upon what in all probability awaited his heir. The visit of Troyekurov and the reception given to him were already known to the whole neighborhood and the local politicians predicted that it would have serious consequences.

What is to be will be, said the priest's wife, but it will be a pity if Vladimir Andreyevich does not become our master. He is a fine young fellow, there is no denying that.

And who is to be our master if he is not to be? interrupted Yegorovna. Kirila Petrovich is storming to no purpose—it is no timid soul he has to deal with. My young falcon will know how to stand up for his rights and with God's help his friends in high places will stick up for him. Kirila Petrovich is too proud and yet he did put his tail between his legs when my Crishka cried out to him. Be off you old cur! Clear out of the place!

Oh! Yegorovna, said the deacon, how ever could he bring his tongue to utter such words? I think I could more easily bring myself to gainsay the bishop than look askance at Kirila Petrovich. I shiver and shake at the very sight of him and my back bends of itself of itself!

Vanity of vanities! said the priest, the service for the dead will some day be chanted for Kirila Petrovich as it was today for Andrey Gavrilovich, the funeral will perhaps be more imposing and more guests will be invited, but is it not all the same to God?

Oh, father, we wanted to invite all the neighborhood, but Vladimir Andreyevich forbade it. To be sure we have plenty to entertain people with, but what would you have had us do? At all events, if there are not many people I will treat you well, our dear guests.

This friendly promise and the hope of finding toothsome pie, caused the talkers to quicken their steps.

and they safely reached the manor house where the table was already laid and vodka served

Meanwhile Vladimir advanced further into the depth of the wood trying to deaden his grief by tiring himself out. He walked on without troubling to keep to the road the branches constantly caught at and scratched him and his feet continually sank into the swamp—he observed nothing. At last he reached a small glade surrounded by trees on every side a little stream wound silently through the trees half stripped of their leaves by the autumn. Vladimir stopped, sat down upon the cold turf and thoughts each more gloomy than the other crowded his mind. He felt his loneliness very keenly the future appeared to him enveloped in threatening clouds. Troyekurov's enmity foreboded fresh misfortunes for him. His modest heritage might pass from him into the hands of another, in which case destitution awaited him. For a long time he sat quite motionless observing the gentle flow of the stream bearing along on its surface a few withered leaves and vividly presenting to him a true image of life. At last he noticed that it was growing dark he arose and began to look for the road home but for a long time he wandered about the unknown forest before he stumbled upon the path which led straight up to the gate of his house.

There he saw the priest and his companions coming toward him. The thought immediately occurred to him that this foreboded misfortune. He automatically turned aside and disappeared behind the trees. They had not caught sight of him and they continued talking heatedly among themselves as they passed him.

"Fly from evil and do good" said the priest to his wife. "There is no need for us to remain here it does not concern us however the business may end."

The priest's wife made some reply but Vladimir could not hear what she said

Approaching the house he saw a crowd of people peasants and house serfs filled the courtyard In the distance Vladimir could hear an unusual noise and the sound of voices Near the shed stood two oskars On the steps several unknown men in uniform were seemingly engaged in conversation

What does this mean? he asked angrily of Anton who ran forward to meet him Who are these people, and what do they want?

Oh father Vladimir Andreyevich replied Anton out of breath the magistrates have come They are handing us over to Troyekurov they are taking us from your honor!

Vladimir hung his head his people surrounded their unhappy master

You are our father they cried kissing his hands We want no other master but you We will die but we will not leave you Give us the order and we will settle the officials

Vladimir looked at them and strange feelings moved him

Keep quiet he said to them I will speak to the officers

That's it—speak to them father shouted the crowd bring the accursed wretches to reason!

Vladimir approached the officials Shabashkin with his cap on his head stood with his arms akimbo looking proudly around him The sheriff a tall stout man of about fifty years of age with a red face and a mustache seeing Dubrovsky approach cleared his throat and called out in a hoarse voice

“And therefore I repeat to you what I have already said by the decision of the district Court, you now be long to Kirila Petrovich Troyekurov who is here represented by Mr Shabashkin Obey all his orders and you, women, love and honor him for he is certainly fond of you

At this coarse joke the sheriff guffawed, Shabashkin and the other officials following his example Vladimir was boiling with indignation

Allow me to ask, what does all this mean?" he inquired with pretended calmness, of the jocular police officer

It means replied the witty official that we have come to place Kirila Petrovich Troyekurov in possession of this property, and to request certain others to take themselves off while they can do it in peace

But I think that you could have communicated all this to me first rather than to my peasants and announced to the landowner the decision of the authorities—

The former landowner Andrey Gavrilovich Dubrovsky died by the will of God and who are you anyway? said Shabashkin, with an insolent look We do not know you and we don't want to know you

Your honor that is our young master, Vladimir Andreyevich" said a voice in the crowd

Who dared to open his mouth? said the sheriff ferociously What master? What Vladimir Andreyevich? Your master is Kirila Petrovich Troyekurov do you hear you blockheads?

Not quite! said the same voice

But this is a revolt! shrieked the police officer H, bailiff come here!

The bailiff stepped forward

"Find out immediately who it was that dared to answer me. I'll teach him a lesson!

The bailiff turned toward the crowd and asked who had spoken But all remained silent Soon a murmur was heard at the back, it gradually grew louder and in a minute it broke out into a terrible clamor. The sheriff lowered his voice and was about to try to persuade them to be calm.

Don't pay attention to him! cried the house serfs. Lay on, lads! And the crowd lurched forward.

Shabashkin and the others rushed into the vestibule and locked the door behind them.

Break in, lads! cried the same voice, and the crowd pressed forward.

Hold! cried Dubrovsky. Idiots! what are you doing? You will ruin yourselves and me too. Go home all of you and leave me to myself. Don't fear, the Czar is merciful. I will present a petition to him—he will not let us be wronged. We are all his children. But how can he stand up for you if you begin acting like rebels and brigands?

This speech of young Dubrovsky's, his resonant voice and imposing appearance produced the desired effect. The crowd grew quiet and dispersed, the courtyard became empty, the officials kept indoors. Vladimir sadly ascended the steps. Shabashkin cautiously unlocked the door, came out on to the steps and with obsequious bows began to thank Dubrovsky for his kind intervention.

Vladimir listened to him with contempt and made no reply.

We have decided, continued the assessor, with your permission to remain here for the night, as it is already dark and your peasants might attack us on the road. Be kind enough to order some hay to be put down for us on the parlor floor, as soon as it is daylight we will leave.

Do what you please, replied Dubrovsky drily. I am no longer master here.

With these words he retired to his father's room and locked the door behind him.

VI

AND SO I'm done for! said Vladimir to himself. This morning I had a corner and a piece of bread to-morrow I must leave the house where I was born. My father with the ground where he reposes will belong to that hateful man the cause of his death and of my ruin! Vladimir clenched his teeth and fixed his eyes upon the portrait of his mother. The artist had represented her leaning upon a balustrade, in a white morning dress with a rose in her hair.

And that portrait will fall into the hands of the enemy of my family thought Vladimir. It will be thrown into a lumber room together with broken chairs or hung up in the ante room, to become an object of derision for his whips and in her bedroom in the room where my father died will be installed his bailiff or his harem. No no! he shall not have possession of the house of mourning from which he is driving me.

Vladimir clenched his teeth again terrible thoughts rose up in his mind. The voices of the officials reached him they were giving orders demanding first one thing and then another, and disagreeably disturbing him in the midst of his sad meditations.

At last all became quiet.

Vladimir unlocked the chests and boxes and began to examine the papers of the deceased. They consisted for the most part of accounts and business letters. Vladimir tore them up without reading them. Among them he came across a packet with the inscription Letters from my wife. A prey to deep emotion, Vladimir began to read them. They had been written during the Turkish campaign and were addressed to the army from Kistenyovka. She described to her husband her lonely life and the affairs of the farm complained with tenderness of the separation and implored him to return home as soon as possible to the arms of his good wife. In one of these letters she expressed to him her anxiety concerning the health of little Vladimir; in another she rejoiced over his early intelligence and predicted for him a happy and brilliant future. Vladimir was so absorbed in his reading that he forgot everything else in the world as his mind conjured up visions of domestic happiness and he did not observe how the time was passing. The clock upon the wall struck eleven. Vladimir placed the letters in his pocket, took a candle and left the room. In the parlor the officials were sleeping on the floor. Upon the table were tumblers which they had emptied and a strong smell of rum pervaded the entire room. Vladimir turned from them with disgust and passed into the ante-room. The doors were locked. Not finding the key, Vladimir returned to the parlor; the key was lying on the table. Vladimir unlocked the door and stumbled on a man who was crouching in a corner. An ax glistened in his hand. Turning the candle on him, Vladimir recognized Arkhip the blacksmith.

Why are you here? he asked.

Oh, Vladimir Andreyevich, it's you!" Arkhip answered in a whisper. The Lord save and preserve us! It's a good thing that you had a candle with you."

Vladimir looked at him in amazement.

Why are you hiding here? he asked the blacksmith.

I wanted—I came to find out if they were all in the house," replied Arkhip in a low faltering voice.

And why have you got your ax?

Why have I got my ax? Can anybody go about nowadays without an ax? These officials are such impudent knaves that one never knows——"

You are drunk, drop the ax and go sleep it off

I drunk? Master Vladimir Andreyevich God is my witness that not a single drop of brandy has passed my lips nor has the thought of such a thing entered my mind Would the thought of drink enter my mind at a time like this? Was ever such a thing heard of? These clerks have taken it into their heads to rule over us and to drive our master out of the manor house How they snore the wretches! I'd put an end to the lot and be done with it

Dubrovsky frowned

Listen Arkhip said he, after a short pause Get such ideas out of your head It is not the fault of the officials Light the lantern and follow me

Arkhip took the candle out of his master's hand found the lantern behind the stove lit it and then both of them softly descended the steps and proceeded down the courtyard The watchman began beating upon an iron plate the dogs commenced to bark

Who is on the watch? asked Dubrovsky

We master replied a thin voice Vasilisa and Lukerya

Go home said Dubrovsky to them, you are not wanted

You can quit added Arkhip

Thank you kind sir replied the women, and they immediately went home

Dubrovsky walked on further Two men approached him they challenged him and Dubrovsky recognized the voices of Anton and Grisha

Why are you not in bed and asleep? he asked them

This is no time for us to think of sleep replied Anton Who would have thought that we should ever have come to this?

Softly interrupted Dubrovsky Where is Yegorovna?

In the manor house in her room replied Grisha

Go and bring her here and make all our people get out of the house let not a soul remain in it except the officials and you Anton get the cart ready

Grisha departed a minute afterward he returned with his mother The old woman had not undressed that night with the exception of the officials nobody in the house had closed an eye

Are all here? asked Dubrovsky Has anybody been left in the house?

Nobody except the clerks replied Grisha

Bring some hay or some straw said Dubrovsky

The servants ran to the stables and returned with armfuls of hay

Put it under the steps—that's it Now my lads a light!

Arkhip opened the lantern and Dubrovsky kindled a torch

Wait a minute said he to Arkhip I think in my hurry that I locked the doors of the hall Go quickly and open them

Arkhip ran to the vestibule the doors were open He locked them muttering in an undertone It's likely that I'll leave them open! and then returned to Dubrovsky

Dubrovsky applied the torch to the hay which burst into a blaze the flames rising to a great height and illuminating the whole courtyard

Oh dear me! cried Yegorovna plaintively "vladimir Andreyevich what are you doing

Silence! said Dubrovsky Now children fare well! I am going where God may direct me Be happy with your new master

Our father our provider! cried the peasants we will die—but we will not leave you we will go with you

The horses were ready Dubrovsky took his seat in the cart with Grisha, Anton whipped the horses and they drove out of the courtyard

A wind rose In one moment the whole house was enveloped in flames The panes cracked and splintered the burning beams began to crash a red smoke rose above the roof, and there were piteous groans and cries of Help help!

Shout away! said Arkhip with a malicious smile contemplating the fire

Dear Arkhip said Yegorovna to him save them the scoundrels and God will reward you

Not a chance replied the blacksmith

At that moment the officials appeared at the window, endeavoring to burst the double sash But at the same instant the roof caved in with a crash—and the cries ceased

Soon all the peasants came pouring into the courtyard The women screaming wildly hastened to save their effects the children danced about admiring the conflagration The sparks flew up in a fiery shower setting the huts on fire

Now everything is right! said Arkhip How it burns! It must be a grand sight from Pokrovskoye

At that moment a new sight attracted his attention A cat ran along the roof of a burning barn without knowing where to leap down Flames surrounded it on every side The poor creature cried for help with plaintive mewings the children screamed with laughter on seeing its despair

What are you laughing at you imps? said the blacksmith angrily "Do you not fear God? One of God's creatures is perishing and you rejoice over it"

Then placing a ladder against the burning roof he climbed up to fetch the cat. She understood his intention and with grateful eagerness clutched hold of his sleeve. The half burnt blacksmith descended with his burden.

And now lads good bye, he said to the dismayed peasants—there is nothing more for me to do here. May you be happy. Do not think too badly of me.

The blacksmith went away. The fire raged for some time longer and at last went out. Piles of red hot embers glowed brightly in the darkness of the night while round about them wandered the burnt out inhabitants of Kistenyovka.

THE next day the news of the fire spread through all the neighborhood. All discussed it and made various guesses about it. Some maintained that Dubrovsky's servants having got drunk at the funeral had set fire to the house through carelessness; others blamed the officials who were drunk also in their new quarters. Many maintained that he had himself perished in the flames with the officials and all his servants. Some guessed the truth and affirmed that the author of the terrible calamity was Dubrovsky himself urged on by resentment and despair.

Troyekurov came the next day to the scene of the conflagration and conducted the inquest himself. I transpired that the sheriff, the assessor of the district Court, a solicitor and a clerk, as well as Vladimir Dubrovsky, the nurse Yegorovna, the servant Grisha, the coachman Anton, and the blacksmith Arkhup had disappeared—nobody knew where. All the servants declared that the officials perished at the moment when the roof fell in. Their charred remains in fact were discovered. Vasilisa and Lukerya said that they had seen Dubrovsky and Arkhip the blacksmith a few minutes before the fire. The blacksmith Arkhip all asserted was alive and was probably the principal, if not the sole author of the fire. Strong suspicions fell upon Dubrovsky. Kirila Petrovich sent to the Governor a detailed account of all that had happened and a new suit was commenced.

Soon other reports furnished fresh food for curiosity and gossip. Brigands appeared at X and spread terror throughout the neighborhood. The measures taken against them proved unavailing. Robberies each more startling than the last followed one after another. There was no security either on the roads or in the villages. Several troikas, filled with brigands traversed the whole province in open daylight stopping travelers and the mail. The villages were visited by them and the manor houses were attacked and set on fire. The chief of the band had acquired a great reputation for intelligence, daring, and a sort of generosity. Wonders were related of him. The name of Dubrovsky was upon every tongue. Everybody was convinced that it was he and nobody else, who commanded the daring robbers. One thing was remarkable: the domains and property of Troyekurov were spared. The brigands had not attacked a single barn of his, nor stopped a single cart belonging to him. With his usual arrogance Troyekurov attributed this exception to the fear which he had inspired throughout the whole province as well as to the excellent police which he had organized in his villages. At first the neighbors smiled at the presumption of Troyekurov, and everyone expected that the uninvited guests would visit Pokrovskoye where they would find something worth having; but at last they were compelled to agree and confess that the brigands showed him unaccountable respect. TROYE KUROV triumphed and at the news of each fresh exploit on the part of Dubrovsky he indulged in ironical remarks at the expense of the Governor, the police and the company commanders from whom Dubrovsky invariably escaped with impunity.

Meanwhile the 1st of October arrived the day of the annual church festival in TROYE KUROV'S village. But before we proceed to describe this solemn occasion as well as further events we must acquaint the reader with some characters who are new to him or whom we merely mentioned at the beginning of our story.

VIII

THE reader has probably already guessed that KIRILA PETROVICH'S daughter of whom we have as yet said but very little is the heroine of our story. At the period about which we are writing she was seventeen years old and in the full bloom of her beauty. Her father loved her to distraction but treated her with his characteristic wilfulness at one time endeavoring to gratify her slightest whims at another terrifying her by his stern and sometimes brutal behavior. Convinced of her attachment he could yet never gain her confidence. She was accustomed to conceal from him her thoughts and feelings because she never knew in what manner they would be received. She had no companions and had grown up in solitude. The wives and daughters of the neighbors rarely visited KIRILA PETROVICH whose usual conversation and amusements demanded the companionship of men and not the presence of ladies. Our beauty rarely appeared among the guests who feasted at her father's house. The extensive library consisting for the most part of works of French writers of the eighteenth century was put at her disposal. Her father, who never read anything except The Perfect Cook, could not guide her in the choice of books, and Masha, after having rummaged through works of various kinds, had naturally given her preference to romances. In this manner she went on completing her education, first begun under the direction of Mademoiselle Mimi, in whom Kirila Petrovich reposed great confidence, and whom he was at last obliged to send away secretly to another estate, when the results of this friendship became too apparent.

Mademoiselle Mimi left behind her a rather agreeable recollection. She was a good-natured girl, and had never misused the influence that she evidently exercised over Kirila Petrovich, in which she differed from the other favorites, whom he constantly kept changing. Kirila Petrovich himself seemed to like her more than the others, and a dark-eyed, roguish-looking little fellow of nine, recalling the Southern features of Mademoiselle Mimi, was being brought up by him and was recognized as his son, in spite of the fact that quite a number of bare-footed lads ran about in front of his windows, who were the very spit of Kirila Petrovich, and who were considered house-serfs. Kirila Petrovich had sent to Moscow for a French tutor for his little son, Sasha, and this tutor came to Pokrovskoye at the time of the events that we are now describing.

This tutor, by his pleasant appearance and simple manner, produced an agreeable impression upon Kirila Petrovich. He presented to the latter his diplomas, and a letter from one of Troyekurov's relations, with whom he had lived as tutor for four years. Kirila Petrovich examined all these, and was dissatisfied only with the youthfulness of the Frenchman, not because he considered this agreeable defect incompatible with the patience and experience necessary for the unhappy call ing of a tutor but because he had doubts of his own which he immediately resolved to have cleared up. For this purpose he ordered Masha to be sent to him. Kirila Petrovich did not speak French and she acted as interpreter for him.

Come here Masha tell this Monsieur that I accept him only on condition that he does not venture to run after my girls for if he should do so the son of a dog I'll Translate that to him Masha

Masha blushed and turning to the tutor told him in French that her father counted upon his modesty and orderly conduct.

The Frenchman bowed to her and replied that he hoped to merit esteem even if favor were not shown to him.

Masha translated his reply word for word.

Very well very well said Kirila Petrovich he needs neither favor nor esteem. His business is to look after Sasha and teach him grammar and geography—translate that to him.

Masha softened the rude expressions of her father in translating them and Kirila Petrovich dismissed his Frenchman to the wing of the house where a room had been assigned to him.

Masha had not given a thought to the young Frenchman. Brought up with aristocratic prejudices a tutor in her eyes was only a sort of servant or artisan and a servant or an artisan did not seem to her to be a man. Nor did she observe the impression that she had produced upon Monsieur Deforges his confusion his agitation his changed voice. For several days in succession she met him fairly often but without deigning to pay him much attention. In an unexpected manner however she formed quite a new idea of him.

In Kirila Petrovich's courtyard there were usually kept several bear-cubs and they formed one of the chief amusements of the master of Pokrovskoye. While they were young they were brought every day into the parlor where Kirila Petrovich used to spend whole hours in amusing himself with them setting them at cats and puppies. When they were grown up they were put on a chain being baited in earnest. Sometimes they were brought out in front of the windows of the manor house, and an empty wine-cask, studded with nails was put before them. The bear would sniff it then touch it gently, and getting its paws pricked it would become angry and push the cask with greater force, and so wound itself still more. The beast would then work itself into a perfect frenzy and fling itself upon the cask, growling furiously until they removed from the poor animal the object of its vain rage. Sometimes a pair of bears were harnessed to a telega, then, willingly or unwillingly guests were placed in it and the bears were allowed to gallop wherever chance might direct them. But the favorite joke of Kirila Petrovich was as follows:

A starved bear used to be locked up in an empty room and fastened by a rope to a ring screwed into the wall. The rope was nearly the length of the room so that only the opposite corner was out of the reach of the ferocious beast. A novice was generally brought to the door of this room, and as if by accident, pushed in where the bear was, the door was then locked and the unhappy victim was left alone with the shaggy hermit. The poor guest with torn skirt and scratched hands soon sought the safe corner but he was sometimes compelled to stand for three whole hours pressed against the wall watching the savage beast two steps from him, leaping and standing on its hind legs growling tugging at the rope and endeavoring to reach him. Such were the noble amusements of a Russian gentleman!

Some days after the arrival of the French tutor Troyekurov thought of him and resolved to give him a taste of the bear's room. For this purpose he summoned him one morning and conducted him along several dark corridors suddenly a side door opened—two servants pushed the Frenchman into the room and locked the door after him. Recovering from his surprise, the tutor perceived the chained bear. The animal began to snort and to sniff at his visitor from a distance and suddenly raising himself upon his hind legs he advanced toward him. The Frenchman did not lose his head he did not run away but awaited the attack. The bear approached Deforges drew from his pocket a small pistol inserted it in the ear of the hungry animal and fired. The bear rolled over. All ran to the spot the door was opened and Kirila Petrovich entered astonished at the outcome of his joke.

Kirila Petrovich wanted an explanation of the whole affair. Who had warned Deforges of the joke or how came he to have a loaded pistol in his pocket? He sent for Masha. Masha came and interpreted her father's questions to the Frenchman.

I never heard of the bear replied Deforges but I always carry a pistol about with me because I do not intend to put up with an offence for which on account of my calling I cannot demand satisfaction.

Misha looked at him in astonishment and translated his words to Kirila Petrovich. Kirila Petrovich made no reply he ordered the bear to be removed and skinned then turning to his people, he said

A capital fellow! There is nothing of the coward about him. By the Lord he is certainly no coward!

From that moment he took a liking to Deforges and never thought again of putting him to the proof.

But this incident produced a still greater impression upon Masha. Her imagination had been struck she had seen the dead bear, and Deforges standing calmly over it and talking tranquilly to her. She saw that bravery and proud self respect did not belong exclusively to one class and from that moment she began to show the young man a respect which increased from hour to hour. A certain intimacy sprang up between them. Masha had a beautiful voice and great musical ability. Deforges volunteered to give her lessons. After that it will not be difficult for the reader to guess that Masha fell in love with him without acknowledging it to herself.

IX

ON THE eve of the festival of which we have already spoken, the guests began to arrive at Pokrovskoye. Some were accommodated at the manor house and in the wings, others in the house of the bailiff, a third party was quartered upon the priest and the remainder upon the better class of peasants. The stables were filled with the horses of the visitors and the yards and coach houses were crowded with vehicles of every sort. At nine o'clock in the morning the bells ring for mass, and everybody repaired to the new stone church built by Kirila Petrovich and annually embellished thanks to his contributions. The church was soon crowded with such a number of distinguished worshippers that the simple peasants could find no room within the edifice and had to stand on the porch and within the enclosure. The mass had not yet begun—they were waiting for Kirila Petrovich. He arrived at last in a caleche drawn by six horses and solemnly walked to his place accompanied by Marya Kirilovna. The eyes of both men and women were turned upon her—the former were astonished at her beauty the latter examined her dress with great attention.

The mass began. The home trained choristers sang in the choir and Kirila Petrovich joined in with them. He prayed without looking either to the right or to the left and with proud humility he bowed himself to the ground when the deacon in a loud voice mentioned the name of the builder of this temple.

The mass came to an end. Kirila Petrovich was the first to go up to kiss the crucifix. All the others followed him. the neighbors approached him with deference, the ladies surrounded Masha. Kirila Petrovich on leaving the church invited everybody to dine with him, then he seated himself in his coach and drove home. All the guests followed him.

The rooms began to fill with the visitors. every moment new faces appeared and it was with difficulty that the host could be approached. The ladies sat decorously in a semicircle dressed in antiquated fashion in gowns of faded but expensive material and were bedecked with pearls and diamonds. The men crowded round the caviar and the vodka conversing among themselves with great animation. In the dining room the table was laid for eighty. the servants were bustling about arranging the bottles and decanters and adjusting the table-cloths.

At last the house steward announced that dinner was ready. Kirila Petrovich went in first to take his seat at the table. the ladies followed him and took their places with an air of great dignity obeying to some extent the rule of seniority. The young ladies crowded together like a timid flock of kids and took their places next to one another. Opposite to them sat the men. At the end of the table sat the tutor by the side of little Sasha.

The servants began to serve the guests according to rank. in case of doubt they were guided by Lavater's theories and almost never made a mistake. The noise of the plates and spoons mingled with the loud talk of the guests. Kirila Petrovich looked gaily round his table and thoroughly enjoyed the pleasure of being so hospitable a host. At that moment a carriage, drawn by six horses, drove into the yard.

Who is that? asked the host.

Anton Pafnutyich, replied several voices.

The doors opened and Anton Pafnutyich Spitzyn, a stout man of about fifty years of age with a round port-marked face, adorned with a treble chin, rolled into the dining room bowing smiling and preparing to make his excuses.

A cover here! cried Kirila Petrovich. Pray sit down Anton Pafnutyich and tell us what this means: you were not at my mass, and you are late for dinner. This is not like you. You are devout and you love good cheer.

Pardon me, replied Anton Pafnutyich fastening his serviette in the button hole of his coat. pardon me my dear Kirila Petrovich. I started out early but I had not gone ten versts when suddenly the tire of the front wheel snapped in two. What was to be done? Fortunately it was not far from the village. But by the time we had arrived there and had found a blacksmith and had got everything put to rights, three hours had elapsed. It could not be helped. To take the shortest route through the Kistenjovka woods I did not dare so we came the longest way round.

"Ah ah!" interrupted Kirila Petrovich. it is evident that you are no dare-devil. What are you afraid of?

"How what am I afraid of my dear Kirila Petrovich? And Dubrovsky? I might have fallen into his clutches. He is a young man who never misses his aim—he lets nobody off and I am afraid he would have flayed me twice over had he got hold of me."

Why brother such a distinction?

Why dear Kirila Petrovich? Have you forgotten the lawsuit of the late Andrey Gavrilovich? Was it not I who to please you that is to say according to conscience and justice showed that Dubrovsky held possession of Kistenjovka without having any right to it and solely through your condescension and did not the deceased—God rest his soul—vow that he would settle with me in his own way and might not the son keep his father's word? Hitherto the Lord has been merciful to me. Up to the present they have only plundered one of my barns but one of these days they may find their way to the manor house.

Where they would find rich booty observed Kirila Petrovich. I have no doubt that the little red cash box is as full as it can be.

Not so dear Kirila Petrovich there was a time when it was full but now it is quite empty.

Don't you fib Anton Pafnutyich. We know you. Where do you spend money? At home you live like a pig, you never receive anybody and you fleece your peasants. You do nothing with your money but hoard it.

You are only joking dear Kirila Petrovich murmured Anton Pafnutyich smiling "but I swear to you that we are ruined" and Anton Pafnutyich began to chew a greasy piece of pie, to take away the sting of his host's joke.

Kirila Petrovich left him and turned to the new sheriff who was his guest for the first time and who was sitting at the other end of the table, near the tutor.

Well Mr Sheriff will you catch Dubrovsky?"

The sheriff was frightened bowed smiled stammered and said at last

We will do our best, Your Excellency."

Hm! we will do our best! You have been doing your best for a long time and to no purpose And after all why try to catch him? Dubrovsky's robberies are a blessing to the sheriffs what with trips and investigations, the money gets into one's pocket Why do away with such a godsend? Isn't that true Mr Sheriff?

Perfectly true Your Excellency, replied the sheriff in utter confusion

The guests roared with laughter

I like the fellow for his frankness said Kirila Petrovich but it is a pity that our late sheriff is no longer with us If he had not been burnt the neighborhood would have been quieter And what news of Dubrovsky? Where was he last seen?

At my house Kirila Petrovich said a female voice last Tuesday he dined with me

All eyes were turned toward Anna Savishna Globova a widow a rather simple person beloved by every body for her kind and cheerful disposition Everyone prepared to listen to her story with curiosity

You must know that three weeks ago I sent my steward to the post with a letter for my Vanyusha I do not spoil my son and moreover I haven't the means of spoiling him, even if I wished to do so However you know very well that an officer of the Guards must live in suitable style and I share my income with Vanyusha as well as I can Well I sent two thousand rubles to him and although the thought of Dubrovsky came more than once into my mind I thought to myself the town is not far off—only seven versts altogether please God all will be well But what happens? In the evening my steward returns palpitating and on foot What is the matter? What has happened to you! I exclaimed The brigands have robbed and almost killed me he answered Dubrovsky himself was there, and he wanted to hang me but he afterwards had pity upon me and let me go But he took away everything I had—money horse and cart. A taintness came over me. Heavenly Lord! What will become of my Vanyusha? There was nothing to be done. I wrote him a letter telling him all that had happened and sent him my blessing without a groat. One week passed, and then another. Suddenly, one day a coach drove into my courtyard. Some general asked to see me. I gave orders for him to be shown in. He entered the room and I saw before me a man of about thirty five years of age dark with black hair mustache and beard—the exact portrait of Kulnev. He introduced himself to me as a friend and colleague of my late husband Ivan Andreyevich. He happened to be passing by he said and he could not resist paying a visit to his old friend's widow knowing that I lived there. I invited him to dine and I set before him what God had sent me. We spoke of this and that and at last we began to talk about Dubrovsky. I told him of my trouble. My general frowned. That is strange said he. I have heard that Dubrovsky does not attack everybody but only people who are well known to be rich and that even then he leaves them a part of their possessions and does not rob them of everything. As for murdering people nobody has yet accused him of that. Is there not some knavery here? Oblieve me by sending for your steward.

The steward was sent for and quickly made his appearance. But as soon as he caught sight of the general he stood as if petrified.

Tell me brother in what manner did Dubrovsky rob you and how was it that he wanted to hang you? My steward began to tremble and fell at the general's feet.

Sir I am guilty. The evil one led me astray. I have lied.

If that is so replied the general have the good ness to relate to your mistress how it all happened and I will listen

My steward could not recover himself

Well then continued the general tell us where you met Dubrovsky

At the two pine trees sir at the two pine trees

What did he say to you

He asked me who I was, where I was going and why

Well and after that?

After that he demanded the letter and the money from me and I gave them to him

And he?

Well and he forgive me sir!

Well what did he do?

He returned me the money and the letter and said Go in peace and post this'

Well

Forgive me sir!

I will settle with you my dear fellow' said the general sternly And you madam order this scoundrel's trunk to be searched and then give him into my hands I will teach him a lesson Remember that Dubrovsky himself was once an officer in the Guards, and would not wish to take advantage of a comrade

I guessed who His Excellency was but there was no use saying anything The coachmen tied the steward to the carriage box the money was found the general dined with me and departed immediately afterwards taking with him my steward The steward was found the next day in the wood tied to an oak, and stripped bare

Everybody listened in silence to Anna Savushna's story especially the young ladies Many of them secretly wished well to Dubrovsky seeing in him a romantic hero particularly Marya Kirilovna an ardent dreamer steeped in the mysteries and horrors of Mrs Anne Radcliffe

And do you think Anna Savishna that it was Dubrovsky himself who visited you? asked Kirila Petrovich You are very much mistaken I do not know who your guest may have been but I feel quite sure that it was not Dubrovsky

Not Dubrovsky? How can that be, my dear sir? But who else would stop travelers on the high road and search them?

I don't know but certainly not Dubrovsky I remember him as a child I do not know whether his hair has turned black but in those days his hair was fur and curly But I do know for a positive fact, that Dubrovsky is five years older than my Masha and that consequently he is not thirty five but about twenty three

Exactly Your Excellency observed the sheriff have in my pocket the description of Vladimir Dubrovsky There it is distinctly stated that he is twenty three years of age

Ah! said Kirila Petrovich By the way read it and we will listen it will not be a bad thing for us to know what he looks like Perhaps we may catch a glimpse of him and if so he will not escape in hurry

The sheriff drew from his pocket a rather dirty sheet of paper unfolded it with an air of importance and began to read in a sing song manner

Description of Vladimir Dubrovsky based upon the depositions of his former house serfs

Age twenty two height medium complexion clear beard shaven eyes hazel hair light nose straight special marks none

And is that all? said Kirila Petrovich

That is all replied the sheriff folding up the paper

I congratulate you Mr Sheriff A very valuable document! With that description it will not be difficult for you to find Dubrovsky! Who is not of medium height? Who has not light hair a straight nose and hazel eyes? I would wager that you would talk for three hours at a stretch to Dubrovsky himself, and you would never guess in whose company you were There is no denying that these officials are clever fellows

The sheriff, meekly replacing the paper in his pocket, silently attacked his goose and cabbage Meanwhile the servants had already gone the round of the guests several times filling up each one's glass Several bottles of Don and Caucasian wine had been opened with a great deal of noise and had been favorably received under the name of champagne Faces began to glow and the conversation grew louder more incoherent and more lively

No continued Kirila Petrovich we shall never see another sheriff like the late Taras Alexeyevich! He was no blunderhead no simpleton It is a pity that the fellow was burnt for otherwise not one of the band would have got away from him He would have laid his hands upon the whole lot of them and not even Dubrovsky himself would have escaped or bribed his way out Taras Alexeyevich would surely have taken his money but he would not have let him go That was the man's way Evidently there is nothing else to be done but for me to take the matter in hand and go after the brigands with my people I will begin by sending out twenty men to scour the wood If my people are not cowards Each of them would attack a bear single handed and they certainly would not fall back before a brigand

How is your bear, Kirila Petrovich? asked Anton Pafnutyich, being reminded by these words of his shaggy acquaintance and of certain pleasantries of which he had once been the victim.

Misha has departed this life replied Kirila Petrovich he died a glorious death at the hands of the enemy. There is his conqueror! Kirila Petrovich pointed to the French tutor. You should have an image of the Frenchman patron saint. He has avenged you—if you will allow me to say so—do you remember?

How should I not remember? said Anton Pafnutyich scratching his head. I remember it only too well. So Misha is dead. I am very sorry for Misha—upon my word I am very sorry! How amusing he was! How intelligent! You will not find another bear like him. And why did mossoo kill him?

Kirila Petrovich began with great satisfaction to relate the exploit of his Frenchman for he possessed the happy faculty of boasting of all that belonged to his entourage. The guests listened with great attention to the story of Misha's death and gazed in astonishment at Deforges who not suspecting that his bravery was the subject of the conversation calmly sat in his place occasionally rebuking his restive pupil.

The dinner which had lasted about three hours came to an end the host placed his napkin upon the table and everybody rose and repaired to the parlor where coffee and cards were awaiting them and a continuation of the drinking so famously begun in the dining room.

ABOUT seven o'clock in the evening some of the guests wished to depart but the host merry with punch, ordered the gates to be locked and declared that he would let no one leave the house until the next morning. Music soon resounded, the doors of the ball room were thrown open and the dancing began. The host and his intimates sat in a corner draining glass after glass and admiring the gaiety of the young people. The old ladies played cards. There were fewer men than women as is always the case, except where a brigade of Uhlans is stationed and all the men suitable for partners were soon pressed into service. The tutor particularly distinguished himself: he danced more than anyone else; all the young ladies wanted to have him as a partner, finding it very pleasant to waltz with him. He danced several times with Marya Karilovna and the young ladies observed them mockingly. At last about midnight the tired host stopped the dancing, ordered supper to be served while he betook himself to bed.

The retirement of Karila Petrovich allowed the company more freedom and animation. The gentlemen ventured to sit near the ladies; the girls laughed and whispered to their neighbors; the ladies spoke in loud voices across the table; the gentlemen drank, disputed and laughed boisterously. In a word the supper was exceedingly merry and left behind it many agreeable memories.

One man only did not share in the general joy. Anton Pafnutyich sat gloomy and silent in his place ate absently and seemed extremely uneasy. The conversation about the brigands had worked upon his imagination. We shall soon see that he had good cause to fear them.

Anton Pafnutyich, in invoking God as a witness that his little red cash-box was empty, had not lied and sinned. The little red cash-box was really empty. The money which it had at one time contained had been transferred to a leather pouch which he carried on his breast under his shirt. This precaution alone quieted his distrust of everybody and his constant fear. Being compelled to spend the night in a strange house, he was afraid that he might be lodged in some solitary room where thieves could easily break in. He looked round in search of a trustworthy companion and at last his choice fell upon Deforges. His appearance—indicative of strength—but especially the bravery shown by him in his encounter with the bear which poor Anton Pafnutyich could never think of without a shudder decided his choice. When they rose from the table Anton Pafnutyich began to circle round the young Frenchman clearing his throat and coughing and at last he turned to him and addressed him.

Hm! hm! Couldn't I spend the night in your room, mossoo because you see—

Que désire monsieur? asked Deforges with a polite bow.

Ah! what a pity mossoo that you have not yet learnt Russian. Je vais moi chez vous coucher. Do you understand?

Monsieur très volontiers replied Deforges veuillez donner des ordres en consequence.

Anton Pafnutyich well satisfied with his knowledge of the French language went off at once to make the necessary arrangements.

The guests began to wish each other good night and each retired to the room assigned to him while Anton Pafnutyich went with the tutor to the wing. The night was dark. Deforges lighted the way with a lantern. Anton Pafnutyich followed him boldly enough pressing the hidden treasure occasionally against his breast in order to convince himself that his money was still there.

On arriving at the wing the tutor lit a candle and both began to undress, in the meantime Anton Pafnutyich was walking about the room examining the locks and windows and shaking his head at the disquieting results of his inspection. The doors fastened with only a bolt and the windows had not yet their double frames. He tried to complain to Deforges but his knowledge of the French language was too limited for so elaborate an explanation. The Frenchman did not understand him and Anton Pafnutyich was obliged to leave his complaints. Their beds stood opposite each other they both lay down and the tutor extinguished the light.

Pourquoi vous éteignez pourquoi vous éteignez? cried Anton Pafnutyich, conjugating the verb to extinguish after the French manner. I cannot dormir in the dark.

Deforges did not understand his exclamation and wished him good night.

Accursed heathen! muttered Spitzyn wrapping himself up in the bedclothes he couldn't do without extinguishing the light. So much the worse for him I cannot sleep without a light—Mossoo mossoo he continued Je vié avec vous parler.

But the Frenchman did not reply and soon began to snore.

He is snoring the French brute thought Anton Pafnutyich while I can't even think of sleep. Thieves might walk in at any moment through the open doors or climb in through the window and the firing of a cannon would not wake him the beast!

Mossoo! mossoo!—the devil take you!

Anton Pafnutyich became silent. Fatigue and the effect of the wine gradually overcame his fear. He began to doze, and soon fell into a deep sleep. A strange sensation aroused him. He felt in his sleep that some one was gently pulling him by the collar of his shirt.

Anton Pafnutyich opened his eyes and by the pale light of an autumn morning he saw Deforges standing before him. In one hand the Frenchman held a pocket pistol and with the other he was unfastening the strings of the precious leather pouch. Anton Pafnutyich felt faint.

Qu'est ce que c'est Mossoo qu'est ce que c'est?
said he in a trembling voice.

Hush! Silence! replied the tutor in pure Russian.
Silence! or you are lost. I am Dubrovsky.

XI

WE WILL now ask the reader's permission to explain the last incidents of our story by referring to the circumstances that preceded them and which we have not yet had time to relate.

At the station in the house of the postmaster of whom we have already spoken sat a traveler in a corner looking very meek and patient which showed him to be a man without rank or a foreigner that is a person unable to assert his rights on the post road. His carriage stood in the courtyard waiting for the wheels to be greased. Within it lay a small portmanteau evidence of a very modest fortune. The traveler ordered neither tea nor coffee but sat looking out of the window and whistling to the great annoyance of the postmistress sitting behind the partition.

The Lord has sent us a whistler said she, in a low voice. How he does whistle! I wish he would burst the accursed heathen!

What does it matter? said her husband. Let him whistle!

What does it matter? retorted his angry spouse don't you know the saying?

What saying? That whistling drives money away? Oh Pakhomovna whether he whistles or not we shall have precious little money anyway

Then let him go Sidorych What pleasure have you in keeping him here? Give him the horses and let him go to the devil

He can wait Pakhomovna I have only three isoikas in the stable, the fourth is resting Travelers of more importance may arrive at any moment, and I don't wish to risk my neck for a Frenchman Listen! there you are! Someone is driving up! And at what a rate! Can it be a general?

A coach stopped in front of the steps The servant jumped down from the box opened the door and a moment afterwards a young man in a military cloak and white cap entered the station Behind him followed his servant carrying a small box which he placed upon the window ledge

Horses! said the officer in an imperious voice

Directly! replied the postmaster your pass if you please

I have no pass I am not going to take the main road Don't you recognize me?

The postmaster began to bustle about and rushed out to hurry the drivers The young man began to pace up and down the room went behind the partition and inquired in a low voice of the postmaster's wife

Who is that traveler?"

God knows! she replied some Frenchman or other He has been five hours waiting for horses and has done nothing but whistle the whole time I am tired of him, drat him!

The young man spoke to the traveler in French

Where are you bound for sir? he asked

For the neighboring town replied the Frenchman and from there I am going to a landed proprie tor who has engaged me as tutor without ever having seen me I thought I should have reached the place to day but the postmaster has evidently decided other wise In this country it is difficult to procure horses Mr Officer

And who is the landed proprietor about here with whom you have found a position? asked the officer

Mr Troyekurov replied the Frenchman

Troyekurov? Who is this Troyekurov?

Ma foi monsieur I have heard very little good of him They say that he is a proud and wilful gentleman and so harsh toward the members of his household that nobody can live on good terms with him that all tremble at his name and that with his tutors he stands upon no ceremony whatever indeed that he has flogged two of them to death

Good Lord! And you have decided to take a position with such a monster?

What can I do Mr Officer? He offers me a good salary three thousand rubles a year and all found Perhaps I shall be more fortunate than the others I have an aged mother one half of my salary I will send to her for her support and out of the rest of my money I shall be able in five years to save a small capital sufficient to make me independent for the rest of my life Then bon soir I return to Paris and set up in business

Does anybody at Troyekurov's know you?" asked the officer

Nobody replied the tutor He engaged me at Moscow through one of his friends, whose cook is a countryman of mine and who recommended me I must tell you that I did not intend to be a tutor but a confectioner but I was told that in your country the profession of tutor is more lucrative

The officer reflected

Listen to me, he said to the Frenchman. What would you say if, instead of this position you were offered ten thousand rubles ready money, on condition that you returned immediately to Paris?

The Frenchman looked at the officer in astonishment, smiled and shook his head.

The horses are ready, said the postmaster, entering the room at that moment.

The servant confirmed this statement.

Presently replied the officer: leave the room for a moment. The postmaster and the servant withdrew.

I am not joking, he continued in French. I can give you ten thousand rubles. I only want your absence and your papers.

So saying, he opened his small box and took out of it several bank notes. The Frenchman stared. He did not know what to think.

My absence, my papers! he repeated in astonishment. Here are my papers, but you are surely joking. What do you want my papers for?

That does not concern you. I ask you, do you consent or not?

The Frenchman, still unable to believe his own ears, handed his papers to the young officer, who rapidly examined them.

Your passport, very well; your letter of recommendation, let us see; your birth certificate, capital! Well, here is your money, return home. Fare well.

The Frenchman stood as if glued to the spot. The officer came back.

I had almost forgotten the most important thing of all. Give me your word of honor that all this will remain between you and me. Your word of honor?

My word of honor, replied the Frenchman. "But my papers? What shall I do without them?"

In the first town you come to announce that you have been robbed by Dubrovsky They will believe you and give you the necessary documents Farewell God grant you a safe and speedy return to Paris and may you find your mother in good health

Dubrovsky left the room, got into the coach and dished off

The postmaster stood looking out of the window and when the coach had driven off he turned to his wife exclaiming

Pakhomovna do you know who that was? That was Dubrovsky!

The postmaster's wife rushed toward the window but it was too late Dubrovsky was already a long way off Then she began to scold her husband

You have no fear of God Sidorych Why did you not tell me sooner I should at least have had a glimpse of Dubrovsky But now I shall have to wait long enough before he looks in on us again You have no conscience—that's what it is no conscience!

The Frenchman stood as if petrified The agreement with the officer the money—everything seemed like a dream to him But the bundle of bank notes was there in his pocket eloquently confirming the reality of the wonderful adventure

He resolved to hire horses to take him to the next town He was driven very slowly and he reached the town at nightfall

Just before they reached the gates where in place of a sentinel stood a dilapidated sentry box the Frenchman told the driver to stop got out of the carriage and proceeded on foot explaining by signs to the driver that he might keep the vehicle and the portmanteau as a tip The driver was as much astonished at his generosity as the Frenchman himself had been at Dubrovsky's proposal But concluding that the foreigner had taken leave of his senses the driver thanked him with a very profound bow, and not caring about entering the town he made his way to a house of entertainment which was well known to him and the proprietor of which was a friend of his. There he passed the whole night and the next morning he started back on his return journey with the troika without the carriage and without the portmanteau, but with a swollen face and red eyes.

Dubrovsky, having possessed himself of the French man's papers, boldly presented himself to Troyekurov, as we have already seen, and settled in the house. Whatever were his secret intentions—we shall know them later on—there was nothing at all objectionable in his behavior. It is true that he did not occupy himself very much with the education of little Sasha, to whom he allowed full liberty, nor was he very exacting in the matter of the boy's lessons, which were only given as a matter of form, but he paid great attention to the musical studies of his fair pupil, and frequently sat for hours beside her at the piano.

Everybody liked the young tutor, Kirila Petrovich, for his boldness and dexterity in the hunting field; Marya Kirilovna, for his unbounded zeal and slavish attentiveness; Sasha, for his tolerance; and the members of the household, for his kindness and generosity, apparently incompatible with his station. He himself seemed to be attached to the whole family, and already regarded himself as a member of it.

Between the time that he entered upon a tutor's calling and the date of the memorable fete, about a month had elapsed, and nobody suspected that the modest young Frenchman was in reality the terrible brigand whose name was a source of terror to all the landed proprietors of the neighborhood. During all this time

Dubrovsky had never quitted Pokrovskoye but the reports of his depredations did not cease for all that thanks to the inventive imagination of the country people It is possible too that his band may have continued their exploits during their chief's absence

Passing the night in the same room with a man whom he could only regard as a personal enemy and one of the principal authors of his misfortune Dubrovsky had not been able to resist temptation He knew of the existence of the pouch and had resolved to take possession of it

We have seen how he astounded poor Anton Pafnutyich by his unexpected transformation from a tutor into a brigand

At nine o'clock in the morning the guests who had passed the night at Pokrovskoye repaired one after the other to the sitting room where the samovar was already boiling while before it sat Marya Karlovna in a morning frock and Karila Petrovich in a frieze coat and slippers drinking his tea out of a large cup like a slop basin

The last to appear was Anton Pafnutyich he was so pale and seemed so troubled that everybody was struck by his appearance and Karila Petrovich inquired after his health In reply Spitzyn said something unintelligible glancing with horror at the tutor who sat there as if nothing had happened A few minutes afterwards a servant entered and announced to Spitzyn that his carriage was ready Anton Pafnutyich hastened to take his leave of the company and then hurried out of the room and in spite of the host's efforts to detain him drove off immediately No one could understand what had happened to him and Karila Petrovich came to the conclusion that he had over-eaten

After tea and the farewell breakfast the other guests began to take their leave and soon Pokrovskoye grew empty and life there resumed its ordinary course

SEVERAL days passed and nothing remarkable had happened. The life of the inhabitants of Pokrovskoye was monotonous. Kirila Petrovich went out hunting every day while Marya Kirilovna devoted her time to reading, walking, and especially to music lessons. She was beginning to understand her own heart and acknowledged to herself with involuntary vexation that she was not indifferent to the good qualities of the young Frenchman. He on his side never overstepped the limits of respect and strict decorum and thereby quieted her pride and her timid doubts. With more and more confidence she gave herself up to the alluring habit of seeing him. She felt dull without Deforges and in his presence she was constantly occupied with him, wishing to know his opinion of everything and always agreeing with him. She was not yet in love with him perhaps, but at the first accidental obstacle or sudden adverse move of Fate the flame of passion was sure to burst forth within her heart.

One day on entering the parlor where the tutor awaited her, Marya Kirilovna observed with astonishment that he looked pale and troubled. She opened the piano and sang a few notes, but Dubrovsky, under the pretext of a headache, apologized, interrupted the lesson, and closing the music book immediately slipped a note into her hand. Marya Kirilovna, without pausing to reflect, took it and immediately repented. But Dubrovsky had gone. Marya Kirilovna went to her room, unfolded the note, and read as follows:

Be in the arbor near the brook this evening at seven o'clock. I must speak to you.

Her curiosity was strongly excited. She had long expected a declaration, both desiring it and dreading it. It would have been agreeable to her to hear the confirmation of what she divined but she felt that it would have been unbecoming to hear such a declaration from a man who on account of his position ought never to aspire to win her hand. She resolved to keep the tryst but she hesitated about one thing in what manner she ought to receive the tutor's declaration—with aristocratic indignation with friendly admonition with good humored banter or with silent sympathy. In the meantime she kept constantly looking at the clock. It grew dark candles were brought in Kirila Petrovich sat down to play at Boston with some of his neighbors who had come to pay him a visit. The clock struck a quarter to seven and Marya Kirilovna walked quietly out on to the steps looked round on every side and then ran into the garden.

The night was dark the sky was covered with clouds and it was impossible to see anything at a distance of two paces but Marya Kirilovna went forward in the darkness along paths that were quite familiar to her and in a few minutes she reached the arbor. There she paused in order to draw breath and to present herself before Deforges with an air of unhurried indifference. But Deforges already stood before her.

I thank you he said in a low sad voice for having granted my request. I should have been in despair if you had not complied with it.

Marya Kirilovna answered him in the words she had prepared beforehand.

I hope you will not cause me to repent of my condescension.

He was silent and seemed to be collecting himself.

Circumstances demand—I am obliged to leave you he said at last. It may be that you will soon hear—but before going away I must have an explanation with you.

Marya Karilovna made no reply. In these words she saw the preface to the expected declaration.

I am not what you suppose, he continued, lowering his head. I am not the Frenchman Deforges—I am Dubrovsky.

Marya Karilovna uttered a cry.

Do not be alarmed for God's sake! You need not be afraid of my name. Yes, I am that unhappy man whom your father, after depriving him of his last crust of bread, drove out of his paternal home and sent on to the highway to rob. But you need not be afraid either on your own account or on your father's. All is over.

I have forgiven him; you have saved him. My first bloody deed was to have had him for its victim. I prowled round his house, determining where the fire was to burst out, where I should enter his bedroom and how I should cut him off from all means of escape. At that moment you passed by me like a heavenly vision, and my heart was subdued. I understood that the house, in which you dwelt, was sacred; that not a single being connected with you by the ties of blood could be subject to my curse. I repudiated vengeance as though it were madness. For days on end I wandered around the gardens of Pokrovskoye in the hope of seeing your white dress in the distance. On your incautious walks I followed you, stealing from bush to bush, happy in the thought that I was protecting you, that for you there was no danger, where I was secretly present. At last an opportunity presented itself. I came to live in your house. Those three weeks were for me days of happiness; the recollection of them will be the joy of my sad life. To-day I received news which renders it impossible for me to remain here any longer. I part from you to-day—at this very moment. But before doing so, I felt that it was necessary that I should reveal myself to you, so that you might not curse me nor despise me Think sometime of Dubrovsky Know that he was born for another fate that his soul was capable of loving you that never——

Just then a low whistle sounded and Dubrovsky bowed He seized her hand and pressed it to his burning lips The whistle was repeated

Farewell said Dubrovsky they are calling me A moment's delay may undo me

He moved away Marya Kirilovna stood motionless Dubrovsky returned and once more took her hand

It misfortune should ever overtake you he said in a tender and moving voice and you are unable to obtain help or protection from anybody will you promise to apply to me to demand from me everything that may be necessary for your happiness? Will you promise not to reject my devotion?

Marya Kirilovna wept silently The whistle sounded for the third time

You are ruining me! cried Dubrovsky but I will not leave you until you give me a reply Do you promise me or not?

I promise! murmured the poor girl

Greatly agitated by her interview with Dubrovsky Marya Kirilovna returned from the garden As she approached the house she perceived a great crowd of people in the courtyard a troika was standing in front of the steps the servants were running hither and thither and the whole house was in a commotion In the distance she heard the voice of Kirila Petrovich and she hastened to reach her room fearing that her absence might be noticed Kirila Petrovich met her in the hall The visitors were pressing round our old acquaintance the sheriff and were overwhelming him with questions The sheriff in traveling clothes and armed to the teeth answered them with a mysterious and anxious air

Where have you been Masha? asked Kirila Petrovich Have you seen Monsieur Deforges?

Masha could scarcely answer in the negative

Just imagine continued Kirila Petrovich the sheriff has come to arrest him and assures me that he is Dubrovsky

He answers the description in every respect Your Excellency said the sheriff respectfully

Oh! brother interrupted Kirila Petrovich go to—you know where—with your description I will not surrender my Frenchman to you until I have investigated the matter myself How can anyone believe the word of Anton Pafnutyich a coward and a liar? He must have dreamt that the tutor wanted to rob him Why didn't he tell me about it the next morning? He never said a word about the matter

The Frenchman scared him Your Excellency replied the sheriff and made him swear that he would preserve silence

A pack of lies! exclaimed Kirila Petrovich I will clear the matter up immediately Where is the tutor? he asked of a servant who entered at that moment

He cannot be found anywhere, sir replied the servant

Then search for him! cried Troyekurov beginning to entertain doubts

Show me your vaunted description he said to the sheriff who immediately handed him the paper

Hm! hm! twenty three years old etc., etc That is so but yet that does not prove anything Well what about the tutor?

He is not to be found was again the answer

Kirila Petrovich began to be uneasy, Marya Kirilovna was neither dead nor alive

You are pale Masha her father remarked to her they have frightened you

No papa replied Masha I have a headache

Go to your own room Masha and don't be alarmed

Masha kissed his hand and retired hastily to her room There she threw herself upon her bed and burst into tears and a fit of hysterics The maids hastened to her assistance undressed her with difficulty and with difficulty succeeded in calming her by means of cold water and all kinds of smelling salts They put her to bed and she dozed off

In the meantime the Frenchman could not be found Kirila Petrovich paced up and down the room loudly whistling Thunder of Victory Resound The visitors whispered among themselves the sheriff looked foolish the Frenchman was not to be found Probably he had managed to escape through being warned beforehand But by whom and how? That remained a mystery

It was eleven o'clock but nobody thought of sleep At last Kirila Petrovich said angrily to the sheriff

Well do you wish to stop here till daylight? My house is not an inn You are not quick enough brother to catch Dubrovsky—if he is Dubrovsky Go home and in future be a little quicker And it is time for you to go home too he continued addressing his guests

Order the horses to be hitched up I want to go to bed

In this ungracious manner did Troyekurov take leave of his guests

VIII

SOME TIME elapsed without anything remarkable happening But at the beginning of the following summer, many changes occurred in the family life of Kirila Petrovich.

About thirty versts from Pokrovskoye was the wealthy estate of Prince Vereysky. The Prince had lived abroad for a long time and his estate was managed by a retired major. No intercourse existed between Pokrovskoye and Arbatovo. But at the end of the month of May the Prince returned from abroad and took up residence in his own village, which he had never seen since he was born. Accustomed to social pleasures, he could not endure solitude, and the third day after his arrival he set out to dine with Troyekurov, with whom he had formerly been acquainted. The Prince was about fifty years of age, but he looked much older. Excesses of every kind had ruined his health, and had placed upon him their indelible stamp. In spite of that, his appearance was agreeable and distinguished, and his having always been accustomed to society gave him a certain adroitness, especially with women. He had a constant need of amusement and he was a constant victim of ennui.

Kirila Petrovich was exceedingly gratified by this visit, which he regarded as a mark of respect from a man who knew the world. In accordance with his usual custom, he began to entertain his visitor by conducting him to inspect his outbuildings and kennels. But the Prince could hardly breathe in the atmosphere of the kennels, and he hurried out, holding a scented handkerchief to his nose. The old garden, with its clipped limes, square pond and regular walks, did not please him; he liked English gardens and so-called nature, but he praised and admired everything. The servant came to announce that dinner was served, and they went in to dine. The Prince limped, being fatigued after his walk, and already repenting his visit.

But in the reception room Marya Kirilovna met them—and the old roue was struck by her beauty. Troyekurov placed his guest beside her. The Prince was revived by her presence. he became quite cheerful and succeeded several times in arresting her attention by his curious stories. After dinner Kirila Petrovich proposed a ride on horseback, but the Prince excused himself, pointing to his velvet boots and joking about his gout. He preferred a drive in a carriage, so that he should not be separated from his charming neighbor. The carriage was got ready. The two old men and the beautiful young girl took their seats in it, and they drove off. The conversation did not flag. Marya Kirilovna listened with pleasure to the flattering compliments and witty remarks of the man of the world, when suddenly Vereysky, turning to Kirila Petrovich, asked him what that burnt building was, and whether it belonged to him.

Kirila Petrovich frowned. the memories awakened by the burnt manor house were disagreeable to him. He replied that the land was his now, but that formerly it had belonged to Dubrovsky.

To Dubrovsky? repeated Vereysky. "What! to the famous brigand?"

To his father, replied Troyekurov, and the father himself was something of a brigand too.

And what has become of our Rinaldo? Have they caught him? Is he still alive?

He is still alive and at liberty, and as long as our sheriffs are in league with thieves he will not be caught. By the way, Prince Dubrovsky paid you a visit at Arbatovo.

Yes, last year. I think he burnt something down or got away with some loot. Don't you think, Marya Kirilovna, that it would be very interesting to make a closer acquaintance with this romantic hero?

Interesting! said Troyekurov. she knows him al ready. He taught her music for three whole weeks and thank God took nothing for his lessons.

Then Kirila Petrovich began to relate the story of his French tutor. Marya Kirilovna was on pins and needles. Vereysky listening with deep attention found it all very strange, and changed the subject. On returning from the drive he ordered his carriage to be brought, and in spite of the earnest requests of Kirila Petrovich to spend the night, he took his departure immediately after tea. Before setting out, however, he invited Kirila Petrovich to pay him a visit and to bring Marya Kirilovna with him, and the proud Troyekurov promised to do so for taking into consideration his princely dignity, his two stars, and the three thousand serfs belonging to his ancestral estate he regarded Prince Vereysky in some degree as his equal.

Two days after this visit Kirila Petrovich set out with his daughter to call on Prince Vereysky. On approaching Arbatovo he could not sufficiently admire the clean and cheerful looking huts of the peasants and the stone manor house built in the style of an English castle. In front of the house stretched a green lawn, upon which were grazing some Swiss cows tinkling their bells. A spacious park surrounded the house on every side. The master met the guests on the steps, and gave his arm to the young beauty. She was then conducted into a magnificent hall, where the table was laid for three. The Prince led his guests to a window and a charming view opened out before them. The Volga flowed past the windows and upon its bosom floated laden barges under full sail, and small fishing boats known by the expressive name of murderers. Beyond the river stretched hills and fields and several villages animated the landscape.

Then they proceeded to inspect the pictures bought by the Prince in foreign countries. The Prince ex plained to Marya Kirilovna their subjects related the history of the painters and pointed out the merits and defects of their canvases. He did not speak of pictures in the conventional language of the pedantic connoisseur but with feeling and imagination. Marya Kirilovna listened to him with pleasure.

They went in to dine. Trojekurov rendered full justice to his host's wines and to the skill of his cook while Marya Kirilovna did not feel at all confused or constrained in her conversation with a man whom she now saw for the second time in her life. After dinner the host proposed a walk in the garden. They drank coffee in the arbor on the bank of a broad lake studded with little islands. Suddenly music was heard and a boat with six oars drew up before the arbor. They roved on the lake round the islands and visited some of them. On one they found a marble statue on another a lonely grotto on a third a monument with a mysterious inscription which awakened within Marya Kirilovna a childish curiosity not completely satisfied by the polite but reticent explanations of the Prince. Time passed imperceptibly. It began to grow dark. The Prince under the pretext of the chill and the dew hastened to return to the house, where the samovar awaited them. The Prince requested Marya Kirilovna to discharge the functions of hostess in this home of an old bachelor. She poured out the tea listening to the inexhaustible stories of the charming talker. Suddenly a shot was heard and a rocket illuminated the sky. The Prince gave Marya Kirilovna a shawl and led her and Trojekurov onto the balcony. In front of the house in the darkness different colored fires blazed up whirled round rose up in sheaves poured out in fountains fell in showers of rain and stars went out and then burst into a blaze again. Marya Kirilovna was happy as a child. Prince Vereysky was delighted with her enjoyment and Troyekurov was very well satisfied with him for he accepted tous les frais of the Prince as signs of respect and a desire to please him.

The supper was quite equal to the dinner in every respect. Then the guests retired to the rooms assigned to them and the next morning took leave of their amiable host, promising each other soon to meet again.

XIV

MARYA KIRILOVNA was sitting in her room bent over her embroidery frame before the open window. She did not mistake one skein for another like Conrad's mistress who in her amorous distraction embroidered a rose in green silk. Under her needle, the canvas repeated unerringly the design of the original, but in spite of that her thoughts did not follow her work—they were far away.

Suddenly a hand was thrust silently through the window, placed a letter upon the embroidery frame and disappeared before Marya Kirilovna could recover herself. At the same moment a servant entered to call her to Kirila Petrovich. Trembling she hid the letter under her fichu and hastened to her father in his study.

Kirila Petrovich was not alone. Prince Vereysky was in the room with him. On the appearance of Marya Kirilovna the Prince rose and silently bowed with a confusion that was quite unusual in him.

Come here, Masha, said Kirila Petrovich. I have a piece of news to tell you which I hope will gladden you. Here is a suitor for you: the Prince seeks you in marriage.

Masha was dumbfounded: her face grew deathly pale. She was silent. The Prince approached her, took her hand and with a tender look asked her if she would consent to make him happy Masha remained silent

Consent? Of course she consents said Kirila Petrovich but you know Prince it is difficult for a girl to say the word Well children kiss one another and be happy

Masha stood motionless the old Prince kissed her hand Suddenly the tears began to stream down her pale cheeks The Prince frowned slightly

Go go go! said Kirila Petrovich dry your tears and come back to us in a merry mood They all weep when they are betrothed he continued turning to Vereysky it is their custom Now Prince let us talk business that is to say about the dowry

Marya Kirilovna eagerly took advantage of the permission to retire She ran to her room locked herself in and gave way to her tears already imagining herself the wife of the old Prince He had suddenly become repugnant and hateful to her Marriage terrified her like the block like the grave

No no she repeated in despair I would rather go into a convent I would rather marry Dubrovsky

Then she remembered the letter and eagerly began to read it having a presentiment that it was from him In fact it was written by him and contained only the following words

This evening at ten o'clock at the same place

XV

THE MOON was shining the July night was calm the wind rose now and then and a gentle rustle ran over the garden

Like a light shadow the beautiful young girl drew near to the appointed meeting place Nobody was yet to be seen Suddenly from behind the arbor, Dubrovsky appeared before her

I know all he said to her in a low, sad voice remember your promise

You offer me your protection replied Masha, do not be angry—but it alarms me In what way can you help me?

I can deliver you from the man you detest

For God's sake do not touch him do not dare to touch him if you love me I do not wish to be the cause of any horror

I will not touch him your wish is sacred to me He owes his life to you Never shall a crime be committed in your name You must be pure even though I commit crimes But how can I save you from a cruel father?

There is still hope, perhaps I shall touch him by my tears—my despair He is obstinate but he loves me very dearly

Do not put your trust in a vain hope In those tears he will see only the usual timidity and aversion common to all young girls when they make a marriage of convenience instead of marrying for love But what if he takes it into his head to bring about your happiness in spite of yourself? What if you are conducted to the altar by force in order that your life may be placed for ever in the power of an old man?

Then—then there will be nothing else to do Come for me—I will be your wife

Dubrovsky trembled his pale face flushed deeply and the next minute he became paler than before He remained silent for a long time with his head bent down

Muster the full strength of your soul implore your father throw yourself at his feet represent to him all the horror of the future that he is preparing for you,

your youth fading away by the side of a decrepit and dissipated old man Tell him that riches will not procure for you a single moment of happiness Luxury consoles poverty alone and at that only for a short time, until one becomes accustomed to it Do not be put off by him and do not be frightened either by his anger or by his threats as long as there remains the least shadow of hope For God's sake do not stop pleading with him If however you have no other resource left decide upon a cruel explanation tell him that if he remains inexorable then—then you will find a terrible protector

Here Dubrovsky covered his face with his hands he seemed to be choking Masha wept

My miserable miserable fate! said he with a bitter sigh For you I would have given my life To see you from afar to touch your hand was for me happiness beyond expression and when I see before me the possibility of pressing you to my agitated heart and saying to you Angel let us die—miserable creature that I am! I must fly from such happiness I must put it from me with all my strength I dare not throw myself at your feet and thank Heaven for an unthinkable, unmerited reward Oh! how I ought to hate him who—but I feel that now there is no place in my heart for hatred

He gently passed his arm round her slender figure and pressed her tenderly to his heart Confidingly she leaned her head upon the young brigand's shoulder Both were silent Time flew

I must go said Masha at last

Dubrovsky seemed to awaken from a dream He took her hand and placed a ring on her finger

If you decide upon having recourse to me said he then bring the ring here and place it in the hollow of this oak I shall know what to do"

Dubrovsky kissed her hand and disappeared among the trees

XVI

PRINCE VEREYSKY'S intention of getting married was no longer a secret to the neighbors. Kirila Petrovich was receiving congratulations and preparations were being made for the wedding. Masha postponed from day to day the decisive explanation. In the meantime her manner toward her elderly fiancé was cold and constrained. The Prince did not trouble himself about that; the question of love gave him no concern, her silent consent was quite sufficient for him.

But time was passing. Masha at last decided to act, and wrote a letter to Prince Vereysky. She tried to awaken within his heart a feeling of magnanimity, candidly confessing that she had not the least attachment for him, and entreating him to renounce her hand and even to protect her from the tyranny of her father. She fortunately handed the letter to Prince Vereysky. The latter read it alone, but was not in the least moved by the candor of his betrothed. On the contrary, he perceived the necessity of hastening the marriage, and therefore he showed the letter to his future father-in-law.

Kirila Petrovich was furious, and it was with difficulty that the Prince succeeded in persuading him not to let Masha see that he knew of the letter. Kirila Petrovich agreed not to speak about the matter to her, but he resolved to lose no time and fixed the wedding for the next day. The Prince found this very reasonable, and he went to his betrothed and told her that her letter had grieved him very much, but that he hoped in time to gain her affection, that the thought of resigning her was too much for him to bear, and that he had not the strength to consent to his own death sentence. Then he kissed her hand respectfully and took his departure without saying a word to her about Kirila Petrovich's decision.

But scarcely had he left the house when her father entered and peremptorily ordered her to be ready for the next day. Marya Kirilovna, already agitated by the interview with Prince Vereysky, burst into tears and threw herself at her father's feet.

"Papa! she cried in a plaintive voice, "papa! do not destroy me. I do not love the Prince. I do not wish to be his wife."

"What does this mean?" said Kirila Petrovich fiercely. "All this time you have kept silent as though you consented, and now when everything is settled you become capricious and refuse to accept him. Don't play the fool; you will gain nothing from me that way."

"Do not destroy me!" repeated poor Masha. "Why are you sending me away from you and giving me to a man that I do not love? Are you tired of me? I want to stay with you as before. Papa, you will be sad without me, and sadder still when you know that I am unhappy. Papa, do not force me. I do not wish to marry."

Kirila Petrovich was touched, but he concealed his emotion, and pushing her away from him, said harshly:

"That is all nonsense, do you hear? I know better than you what is necessary for your happiness. Tears will not help you. The day after tomorrow your wedding will take place."

"The day after tomorrow!" exclaimed Masha. "My God! No, no, impossible, it cannot be! Papa, hear me, if you have resolved to destroy me, then I will find a protector that you do not dream of. You will see, and then you will regret having driven me to despair."

What? What? said Troyekurov Threats! You threaten me? Insolent girl! You will see that I will do something to you that you little imagine You dare to threaten me! Let us see who will this protector be?

Vladimir Dubrovsky, replied Masha, in despair

Kirila Petrovich thought that she had gone out of her mind and looked at her in astonishment

Very well! he said to her, after an interval of silence, expect whom you please to deliver you but in the meantime remain in this room—you shall not leave it till the very moment of the wedding

With these words Kirila Petrovich went out locking the door behind him

For a long time the poor girl wept, imagining all that awaited her But the stormy interview had eased her soul and she could more calmly consider the question of her future and what it behoved her to do The principal thing was—to escape this odious marriage The lot of a brigand's wife seemed paradise to her in comparison with the fate prepared for her She glanced at the ring given to her by Dubrovsky Ardently did she long to see him alone once more and take counsel with him before the decisive moment A presentiment told her that in the evening she would find Dubrovsky in the garden near the arbor she resolved to go and wait for him there

As soon as it began to grow dark Masha prepared to carry out her intention but the door of her room was locked Her maid told her from the other side of the door that Kirila Petrovich had given orders that she was not to be let out She was under arrest Deeply hurt she sat down by the window and remained there till late in the night without undressing gazing fixedly at the dark sky Toward dawn she dozed off but her light sleep was disturbed by sad visions and she was soon awakened by the rays of the rising sun

SHE AWOKE and all the horror of her position rose up in her mind. She rang. The maid entered and in answer to her questions replied that Kirila Petrovich had been to Arbatovo the previous evening and had returned very late, that he had given strict orders that she was not to be allowed out of her room and that nobody was to be permitted to speak to her, that otherwise there were no signs of any particular preparations for the wedding, except that the priest had been ordered not to leave the village under any pretext whatever. After giving her this news the maid left Marya Kirilovna and again locked the door.

Her words hardened the young prisoner. Her head burned, her blood boiled. She resolved to inform Dubrovsky of everything, and she began to think of some means by which she could get the ring conveyed to the hollow in the chosen oak. At that moment a stone struck against her window, the glass rattled and Marya Kirilovna, looking out into the courtyard, saw little Sasha making signs to her. She knew that he was attached to her and she was pleased to see him. She opened the window.

Good morning, Sasha, why do you call me?

I came sister to know if you wanted anything. Papa is angry and has forbidden the whole house to do anything for you, but order me to do whatever you like and I will do it for you.

Thank you, my dear Sasha. Listen, you know the old hollow oak near the arbor?

Yes, I know it, sister.

Then if you love me, run there as quickly as you can and put this ring in the hollow, but take care that nobody sees you.

With these words she threw the ring to him and closed the window.

The lad picked up the ring and ran off with all his might and in three minutes he arrived at the chosen tree. There he paused quite out of breath and after looking round on every side placed the ring in the hollow. Having successfully accomplished his mission he wanted to inform Marya Kirilovna of the fact at once when suddenly a red-haired cross-eyed boy in rags darted out from behind the arbor, dashed toward the oak and thrust his hand into the hole. Sasha quicker than a squirrel threw himself upon him and seized him with both hands.

What are you doing here? said he sternly.

What business is that of yours? said the boy, trying to disengage himself.

Leave that ring alone red head cried Sasha or I will teach you a lesson in my own style.

Instead of replying the boy gave him a blow in the face with his fist but Sasha still held him firmly in his grasp and cried out at the top of his voice.

"Thieves! thieves! help! help!"

The boy tried to get away from him. He seemed to be about two years older than Sasha and very much stronger but Sasha was more agile. They struggled together for some minutes at last the red-headed boy gained the advantage. He threw Sasha upon the ground and seized him by the throat. But at that moment a strong hand grasped hold of his shaggy red hair and Stepan the gardener lifted him half a yard from the ground.

Ah! you red-headed beast! said the gardener. "How dare you strike the young gentleman?"

In the meantime Sasha had jumped to his feet and recovered himself.

You caught me under the arm pits said he "or you would never have thrown me Give me the ring at once and be off

"It's likely!" replied the red-headed one, and suddenly twisting himself round he freed his mop from Stepan's hand

Then he started off running but Sasha overtook him gave him a blow in the back and the boy fell The gardener again seized him and bound him with his belt

Give me the ring! cried Sasha

Wait a moment young master said Stepan we will take him to the bailiff to be questioned

The gardener led the captive into the courtyard of the manor house accompanied by Sasha who glanced uneasily at his torn and grass-stained trousers Suddenly all three found themselves face to face with Kirila Petrovich who was going to inspect his stables

What is the meaning of this? he said to Stepan

Stepan in a few words related all that had happened

Kirila Petrovich listened to him with attention

You rascal said he turning to Sasha why did you get into a fight with him?

He stole a ring from the hollow papa make him give up the ring

What ring? From what hollow?

The one that Marva Kirilovna that ring

Sasha stammered and became confused Kirila Petrovich frowned and said shaking his head

Ah! Marya Kirilovna is mixed up in this Confess everything or I will give you such a thrashing as you have never had in your life"

As true as Heaven papa, I papa Marya Kirilovna never told me to do anything papa

Stepan go and cut me some fine fresh birch switches

Stop papa I will tell you all I was running about the courtyard today, when sister opened the window I ran toward her and she opened the window and dropped a ring, not on purpose and I went and hid it in the hollow, and and this red headed fellow wanted to steal the ring

She dropped it not on purpose—you wanted to hide it Stepan go and get the switches

Papa wait I will tell you everything Sister told me to run to the oak tree and put the ring in the hollow I ran and did so but this nasty fellow—

Kirila Petrovich turned to the nasty fellow and said to him sternly

To whom do you belong?

I am a house serf of the Dubrovsky s answered the red headed boy

Kirila Petrovich s face darkened

It seems, then that you do not recognize me as your master Very well What were you doing in my garden?

Stealing raspberries the boy answered with complete indifference

Aha! like master like servant As the priest is so is his parish And do my raspberries grow upon oak trees?

The boy made no reply

Papa make him give up the ring said Sasha

Silence Alexander! replied Kirila Petrovich, don t forget that I intend to settle with you presently Go to your room And you squint-eyes you seem a clever lad if you confess everything to me I will not whip you but will give you a five-copeck piece to buy nuts with Give up the ring and go home

The boy opened his fist and showed that there was nothing in his hand

If you don t, I shall do something to you that you little expect Now!

The boy did not answer a word but stood with his head bent looking like a perfect simpleton

Very well! said Kirila Petrovich lock him up somewhere and see that he does not escape or I ll flay everyone of you

Stepan conducted the boy to the pigeon house locked him in there and ordered the old poultry woman Agafya to keep a watch upon him

There is no doubt about it she has been in touch with that accursed Dubrovsky But can it be that she has really asked his help? thought Kirila Petrovich pacing up and down the room and whistling Thunder of Victory angrily— Perhaps I am hot upon his track and he will not escape us We shall take advantage of this opportunity Hark! a bell thank God that is the sheriff Bring here the boy that is locked up

Meanwhile a small carriage drove into the court yard and our old acquaintance the sheriff entered the room all covered with dust

Glorious news! said Kirila Petrovich I have caught Dubrovsky

Thank God Your Excellency! said the sheriff his face beaming with delight Where is he?

That is to say not Dubrovsky himself but one of his band He will be here presently He will help us to catch his chief Here he is

The sheriff who expected to see some fierce looking brigand was astonished to perceive a thirteen year-old lad of somewhat delicate appearance He turned to Kirila Petrovich with an incredulous look and awaited an explanation Kirila Petrovich then began to relate the events of the morning without however mentioning the name of Marya Kirilovna

The sheriff listened to him attentively glancing from time to time at the young rogue who assuming a look of imbecility seemed to be paying no attention to all that was going on around him

Will Your Excellency allow me to speak to you privately? said the sheriff at last

Kirila Petrovich took him into another room and locked the door after him

Half an hour afterwards they returned to the hall where the captive was awaiting the decision respecting his fate

The master wished, the sheriff said to him to have you locked up in the town gaol to be whipped and then deported as a convict but I interceded for you and have obtained your pardon Untie him!

The lad was unbound

Thank the master, said the sheriff

The lad went up to Kirila Petrovich and kissed his hand

Run away home Kirila Petrovich said to him and in future do not steal raspberries from oak trees

The lad went out ran merrily down the steps and without looking behind him, dashed off across the fields in the direction of Kistenyovka On reaching the village he stopped at a ramshackle hut on the edge of the settlement and tapped at the window The window was opened and an old woman appeared

Grandmother, some bread! said the boy I have eaten nothing since this morning I am dying of hunger

Ah! it is you Mitya, but where have you been all this time, you imp? asked the old woman

I will tell you afterwards grandmother For God's sake, some bread!

Come into the hut then

I haven't the time grandmother I've got to run on to another place Bread for the Lord's sake bread!"

What a fidget! grumbled the old woman there's a piece for you and she pushed through the window a slice of black bread

The boy bit into it greedily and went on slowly chewing as he walked.

It was beginning to grow dark. Mitya made his way along past the barns and kitchen gardens toward the Kistenyovl'a grove. On arriving at the two pine trees standing like advance guards before the grove he paused, looked round on every side, gave a shrill abrupt whistle and then listened. A faint and prolonged whistle was heard in reply and somebody came out of the grove and advanced toward him.

KIRILA PETROVICH was pacing up and down the hall whistling his favorite air louder than usual. The whole house was in commotion: the servants were running about and the maids were busy. In the coach house horses were being hitched up to a carriage. In the courtyard there was a crowd of people. In Marya Kirilovna's dressing room before the looking glass a lady surrounded by maidservants was attiring the pale motionless young bride. Her head bent languidly beneath the weight of her diamonds; she started slightly when a careless hand pricked her, but she remained silent, gazing absently into the mirror.

"Will you soon be ready?" the voice of Kirila Petrovich was heard at the door.

"In a minute!" replied the lady. Marya Kirilovna got up and look at yourself. Is everything right?"

Marya Kirilovna rose but made no reply. The door was opened.

"The bride is ready," said the lady to Kirila Petrovich, "order the carriage."

"May God be with us!" replied Kirila Petrovich and taking a sacred ikon from the table, "Approach, Masha," he said with emotion. "I bless you."

The poor girl fell at his feet and began to sob

Papa papa she said through her tears and then her voice failed her

Kirila Petrovich hastened to give her his blessing
She was lifted up and almost carried into the carriage
The matron of honor and one of the maidservants got in with her and they drove off to the church There the bridegroom was already waiting for them He came forward to meet the bride, and was struck by her pallor and her strange look They entered the cold deserted church together, and the door was locked behind them
The priest came out of the chancel and the ceremony at once began

Marya Kirilovna saw nothing heard nothing she had been thinking of but one thing the whole morning she expected Dubrovsky, nor did her hope abandon her for one moment When the priest turned to her with the usual question she started and felt faint but still she hesitated still she expected The priest receiving no reply from her pronounced the irrevocable words

The ceremony was over She felt the cold kiss of her unloved husband she heard the flattering congratulations of those present and yet she could not believe that her life was bound for ever that Dubrovsky had not arrived to deliver her The Prince turned to her with tender words—she did not understand them They left the church in the porch was a crowd of peasants from Pokrovskoye Her glance rapidly scanned them and again she seemed unaware of what was going on around her The newly married couple seated themselves in the carriage and drove off to Arbatovo whither Kirila Petrovich had already gone on before in order to welcome the wedded pair there

Alone with his young wife the Prince was not in the least piqued by her cold manner He did not begin to weary her with amorous protestations and ridiculous enthusiasm his words were simple and required no answer. In this way they traveled about ten versts. The horses dashed rapidly along the uneven country roads and the carriage scarcely shook upon its English springs. Suddenly shouts of pursuit were heard. The carriage stopped and a crowd of armed men surrounded it. A man in a half mask opened the door on the side where the young Princess sat and said to her

You are free! Alight

What does this mean? cried the Prince. Who are you that—

It is Dubrovsky replied the Princess

The Prince without losing his presence of mind drew from his side pocket a traveler's pistol and fired at the masked brigand. The Princess shrieked and in horror covered her face with both hands. Dubrovsky was wounded in the shoulder the blood was flowing. The Prince, without losing a moment drew another pistol but he was not allowed time to fire the door was opened and several strong hands dragged him out of the carriage and snatched the pistol from him. Above him flashed several knives

Do not touch him! cried Dubrovsky and his somber companions drew back

You are free! continued Dubrovsky turning to the pale Princess

No! she replied it is too late! I am married I am the wife of Prince Verevsky

What are you saying? cried Dubrovsky in despair

No! you are not his wife. You were forced you could never have consented

I did consent I took the oath she answered with firmness. The Prince is my husband give orders for him to be set at liberty and leave me with him. I have not deceived you I waited for you till the last moment but now I tell you now it is too late. Let us go

But Dubrovsky no longer heard her. The pain of his wound and his violent emotion had deprived him of his strength. He fell against the wheel the brigands surrounded him. He managed to say a few words to them. They placed him on horseback, two of them supported him, a third took the horse by the bridle and all withdrew from the spot leaving the carriage in the middle of the road the servants bound, the horses unharnessed, but without having done any pilaging and without having shed one drop of blood in revenge for the blood of their chief.

IN THE MIDST of a dense forest in a narrow clearing rose a small fort consisting of earthworks and a ditch behind which were some shacks and mud huts. Within the inclosed space a crowd of men who by their varied garments and by their arms could at once be recognized as brigands were having their dinner, seated bareheaded around a common cauldron. On the earthworks by the side of a small cannon squatted a sentinel with his legs crossed under him. He was sewing a patch upon a certain part of his garment, plying his needle with a dexterity that bespoke the experienced tailor and every now and then glancing round on every side.

Although a certain mug had passed from hand to hand several times a strange silence reigned among this crowd. The brigands finished their dinner one after another rose and said a prayer some dispersed among the shacks others strolled away into the forest or lay down to sleep according to the Russian custom.

The sentinel finished his work shook his garment gazed admiringly at the patch stuck the needle in his sleeve, sat astride the cannon and began to sing a melancholy old song at the top of his lungs.

Green boughs do not murmur be still Mother Forest

Hinder me not from thinking my thoughts

At that moment the door of one of the shacks opened and an old woman in a white cap neatly and even primly dressed appeared upon the threshold.

Enough of that Styopka she said angrily. The master is resting and yet you must go on bawling like that you have neither conscience nor pity.

I beg pardon Yegorovna replied Styopka. I won't do it any more. Let our good master rest and get well.

The old woman withdrew into the hut and Styopka began to pace to and fro upon the earthworks.

Within the shack from which the old woman had emerged lay the wounded Dubrovsky upon an army cot behind a partition. Before him upon a small table lay his pistols and a sword above the head of the bed. Rich carpets covered the floor and walls of the mud hut. In the corner was a lady's silver toilet set and mirror. Dubrovsky held in his hand an open book but his eyes were closed and the old woman peeping at him from behind the partition could not tell whether he was asleep or only lost in thought.

Suddenly Dubrovsky started. The fort was roused by an alarm and Styopka thrust his head in through the window.

Vladimir Andreyevich! he cried our men are signaling—they are on our track!

Dubrovsky leaped from his bed seized his arms and came out of the shack. The brigands were noisily crowding together in the inclosure but when he appeared a deep silence fell.

Is everyone here? asked Dubrovsky.

Everyone except the sentries "was the reply.

"To your places!" cried Dubrovsky and each of the brigands took his appointed place.

At that moment three of the sentries ran up to the gate of the fort Dubrovsky went to meet them

What is it? he asked

The soldiers are in the forest was the reply, they are surrounding us

Dubrovsky ordered the gate to be locked and then went himself to examine the cannon In the wood could be heard the sound of several voices every moment drawing nearer and nearer The brigands waited in silence Suddenly three or four soldiers appeared out of the forest but immediately fell back again firing their guns as a signal to their comrades

Prepare for battle! cried Dubrovsky There was a movement among the brigands, then all was silent again

Then the noise of an approaching column was heard arms glittered among the trees and about a hundred and fifty soldiers dashed out of the forest and rushed with a wild shout toward the earthworks Dubrovsky applied the match to the cannon the shot was successful—one soldier had his head torn off and two others were wounded The troops were thrown into confusion but the officer in command rushed forward the soldiers followed him and jumped down into the ditch The brigands fired down at them with muskets and pistols and then with axes in their hands they began to defend the earthworks up which the infuriated soldiers were now climbing, leaving twenty of their comrades wounded in the ditch below A hand to hand struggle began The soldiers were already upon the earthworks the brigands were beginning to give way, but Dubrovsky advanced toward the officer in command placed his pistol at his breast and fired The officer fell over backward Several soldiers raised him in their arms and hastened to carry him into the forest the others having lost their chief stopped fighting

The emboldened brigands took advantage of this moment of hesitation and surging forward hurled their assailants back into the ditch. The besiegers began to run the brigands with fierce yells started in pursuit of them. The victory was decisive. Dubrovsky trusting to the complete confusion of the enemy stopped his men and shut himself up in the fortress doubled the sentinels forbade anyone to absent himself and ordered the wounded to be picked up.

This last event drew the serious attention of the government to Dubrovsky's exploits. Information was obtained of his whereabouts and a detachment of soldiers was sent to take him dead or alive. Several of his band were captured and from these it was ascertained that Dubrovsky was no longer among them. A few days after the battle we have just described he had collected all his followers and informed them that it was his intention to leave them for ever and advised them too to change their mode of life.

You have become rich under my command. Each of you has a passport with which he will be able to make his way safely to some distant province where he can pass the rest of his life in ease and honest labor. But you are all rascals and probably do not wish to abandon your trade.

Thereupon he had left them taking with him only one of his men. Nobody knew what became of him. At first the truth of this account was doubted for the devotion of the brigands to their chief was well known and it was supposed that they had concocted the story to secure his safety but after events confirmed their statement. The terrible visits burnings and robberies ceased the roads again became safe. According to another report Dubrovsky had escaped abroad.

EGYPTIAN NIGHTS

I

Quel est cet homme?—Ha c'est un bien grand talent il fait de sa voix tout ce qu'il veut—Il devoit bien ma dame s'en faire une culotte

CHARSKY was one of the native born inhabitants of St Petersburg. He was not yet thirty years of age he was not married the service did not burden him. His late uncle having been a vice governor in the good old days had left him a respectable estate. His life was a very agreeable one but he had the misfortune to write and print verse. In the journals he was called poet and in the servants quarters scribbler.

In spite of the great privileges which versifiers enjoy (we must confess that except the right of using the accusative instead of the genitive, and other so-called poetical licenses we fail to see what are the particular privileges of Russian poets) in spite of their every possible privilege these persons are compelled to suffer a great many disadvantages and much unpleasantness. The bitterest misfortune of all the most intolerable for the poet, is the appellation with which he is branded and which always clings to him. The public look upon him as their own property in their opinion he was created for their especial benefit and pleasure. Should he return from the country the first person who meets him accosts him with Haven't you brought anything new for us?

Should the derangement of his affairs, or the illness of some being dear to him cause him to become lost in reflection immediately a trite smile accompanies his trite exclamation

No doubt you are composing something!

Should he happen to fall in love his fair one purchases an album at the English shop and expects a poem

Should he call upon a man whom he hardly knows to talk about serious matters of business the latter quickly calls his son and compels him to read some of the verses of so and so and the lad regales the poet with some of his lame productions And these are but the flowers of the calling what then must be the thorns! Charsky acknowledged that the compliments the questions the albums and the little boys bored him to such an extent that he was constantly compelled to restrain himself from committing some act of rudeness

Charsky endeavored in every possible way to rid himself of the intolerable appellation He avoided the society of his literary brethren and preferred to them men of the world even the most shallow minded His conversation was of the most commonplace character and never turned upon literature In his dress he always observed the very latest fashion with the timidity and superstition of a young Moscovite arriving in St Petersburg for the first time in his life In his study furnished like a lady's bedroom nothing recalled the writer no books littered the tables the divan was not stained with ink there was none of that disorder which denotes the presence of the Muse and the absence of broom and brush Charsky was in despair ;

any of his society friends found him with a pen in his hand. It is difficult to believe to what trifles a man, otherwise endowed with talent and soul, can descend. At one time he pretended to be a passionate lover of horses; at another a desperate gambler, and at another a refined gourmet, although he was never able to distinguish the mountain bread from the Arab's could never remember the trump cards, and in secret preferred a baked potato to all the inventions of the French cuisine. He led a life of dissipation, was seen at all the balls, overate at all the diplomatic dinners, and at all the soirees was as inevitable as the Rezanovs. For all that, he was a poet, and his passion was invincible. When the "silly fit" (thus he called inspiration) came upon him, Charsky would lock himself up in his study, and write from morning till late into the night. He confessed to his genuine friends that only then did he know what real happiness was. The rest of his time he strolled about dissembled, and was assailed at every step by the eternal question:

Haven't you written anything new?

One morning Charsky felt that happy disposition of the spirit when the dreams shape themselves clearly before your eyes, and you find vivid unexpected words to body forth your visions, when verses flow easily from the pen, and sonorous rhythms fly to meet harmonious thoughts. Charsky was mentally plunged in to sweet oblivion, and the world and the opinions of the world and his own particular whims no longer existed for him. He was writing verse.

Suddenly the door of his study creaked, and a strange head appeared. Charsky started and frowned.

Who is there? he asked with vexation, inwardly cursing his servants, who were never in the ante-room when they were wanted.

The stranger entered. He was tall and spare, and peared to be about thirty years of age. The features of his swarthy face were very expressive: his pale lofty forehead shaded by locks of black hair; his sparkling black eyes; aquiline nose; and thick beard surrounding his sunken tawny cheeks showed him to be a foreigner. He wore a black dress-coat already whitened at the seams and summer trousers (although the season was well into the autumn) under his threadbare black cravat upon a yellowish shirt front glittered an imitation diamond; his shaggy hat seemed to have seen good and bad weather. Meeting such a man in a wood you would have taken him for a robber; in society—for a political conspirator; in an ante-room—for a charlatan; a seller of elixirs and arsenic.

What do you wish? Charsky asked him in French.

Signor, replied the foreigner with profound bows

Lei voglia perdonarmi se

Charsky did not offer him a chair and he rose himself: the conversation was continued in Italian.

I am a Neapolitan artist, said the stranger, circumstances compelled me to leave my native land. I have come to Russia trusting to my talent.

Charsky thought that the Neapolitan was preparing to give some violoncello concerts and was disposing of his tickets from house to house. He was just about to give him twenty-five rubles in order to get rid of him as quickly as possible when the stranger added:

I hope, signor, that you will give friendly support to your confrere and introduce me into the houses to which you have entree.

It was impossible to offer a greater affront to Charsky's vanity. He glanced naughtily at the individual who called himself his confrere.

"Allow me to ask, what are you and for whom do you take me?" he said with difficulty restraining his indignation.

The Neapolitan observed his vexation

Signor he replied stammering Ho creduto ho sentito la vostra Eccellenza mi perdonera

What do you wish? repeated Charsky drily

I have heard a great deal of your wonderful talent I am sure that the gentlemen of this place esteem it an honor to extend every possible protection to such an excellent poet, replied the Italian and that is why I have ventured to present myself to you

You are mistaken signor, interrupted Charsky

The calling of poet does not exist among us Our poets do not solicit the protection of gentlemen, our poets are gentlemen themselves and if our Mæcenases (devil take them!) do not know that, so much the worse for them Among us there are no ragged aboes whom a musician would take off the streets to write him a libretto Among us, poets do not go on foot from house to house begging for help Moreover, they must have been joking when they told you that I was a great poet It is true that I once wrote some wretched epigrams but thank God, I haven't anything in common with versifiers and do not wish to have"

The poor Italian became disconcerted He looked around him The pictures marble statues bronzes, and the costly baubles on Gothic what nots, struck him He understood that between the haughty dandy standing before him in a tufted brocaded cap gold-colored Chinese dressing gown and Turkish sash—and himself a poor wandering artist in threadbare cravat and shabby dress-coat—there was nothing in common He stammered out some unintelligible excuses bowed and wished to retire His pitiable appearance touched Charsky who in spite of the pettiness of his character had a good and noble heart He felt ashamed of the irritability caused by the wound to his vanity

Where are you going? he said to the Italian.

Wait I was compelled to decline an unmerited title and confess to you that I was not a poet. Now let us speak about your business. I am ready to serve you if it be in my power to do so. Are you a musician?

No. Eccellenza replied the Italian. I am a poor improviser.

An improviser! cried Charsky feeling all the cruelty of his reception. Why didn't you say sooner that you were an improviser?

And Charsky pressed his hand with a feeling of sincere regret.

His friendly manner encouraged the Italian. He spoke naively of his plans. His exterior was not deceptive. He was in need of money and he hoped somehow in Russia to improve his domestic circumstances. Charsky listened to him with attention.

I hope said he to the poor artist that you will have success. Society here has never heard an improviser. Curiosity will be aroused. It is true that the Italian language is not in use among us; you will not be understood; but that will be no great misfortune; the chief thing is that you should be in the fashion.

But if nobody among you understands Italian said the improviser becoming thoughtful who will come to hear me?

Have no fear about that—they will come some out of curiosity others to pass away the evening somehow or other others to show that they understand Italian. I repeat it is only necessary that you should be in the fashion and you will be in the fashion—here is my hand.

Charsky dismissed the improviser very cordially after having taken his address and the same evening he set to work to do what he could for him.

II

I am both king and slave both worm and god
Derzhavin.

THE next day in the dark and dirty corrido of a tavern Charsky found number 35. He stopped at the door and knocked. It was opened by the Italian.

Victory! Charsky said to him your affairs are in a good way. The Princess N—— offers you her salon yesterday at the rout, I succeeded in enlisting half of St. Petersburg, get your tickets and announcements printed. If I cannot guarantee a triumph for you, I ll answer for it that you will at least be a gainer in pocket.

And that is the chief thing cried the Italian showing his delight in lively gestures characteristic of his Southern origin. I knew that you would help me Corpo di Bacco! You are a poet like myself and there is no denying that poets are excellent fellows! How can I show my gratitude to you? Wait. Would you like to hear an improvisation?

An improvisation! Can you then do without public without music and without sounds of applause?

Nonsense nonsense! Where could I find a better public? You are a poet you will understand me better than they and your quiet approbation will be dearer to me than a whole storm of applause. Sit down somewhere and give me a theme.

Charsky sat down on a suitcase (of the two chairs in the narrow cubicle one was broken and the other piled with papers and linen). The improviser took a guitar from a chair and stood before Charsky touching the strings with bony fingers and awaiting his order.

Here is your theme then Charsky said to him the poet himself chooses the subject of his songs the crowd has not the right to command his inspiration

The eyes of the Italian began to sparkle he tried a few chords raised his head proudly and passionate strophes—the expression of instantaneous feeling—fell rhythmically from his lips

*With open eyes the poet marches
 But seeing no one seeming blind
 Now someone clutches at his garment
 And pulls him gently from behind!*

*The fool! Where to? He must be dreaming
 They cry This way—the road is clear
 It is in vain they seek to guide him
 The heedless poet does not hear*

*Such is the poet like the wind
 That man can neither call nor bind—
 His flight is free as any eagle's
 He asks no counsel in his art
 But like another Desdemona
 Chooses the idol of his heart*

The Italian ceased Charsky was silent, amazed and touched

Well? asked the improviser

Charsky seized his hand and pressed it firmly

Well how was it? asked the improviser

Wonderful! replied the poet Another's thought has scarcely reached your ears and already it has become your own as if you had nursed fondled and developed it for a long time And so for you there exists neither toil nor disenchantment nor that uneasiness which precedes inspiration? Wonderful wonderful!"

The improviser replied Every talent is inexplicable
 How does the sculptor see in a block of Carrara marble the hidden Jupiter, and how does he bring it to light with hammer and chisel by chipping off its envelope? Why does the idea issue from the poet's head already equipped with four rhymes and measured off in ordered regular feet? Thus, nobody except the improviser himself can understand that rapidity of impression that close connection between his own inspiration proper and the will of another. I myself would try in vain to explain it. But I must think of my first evening. What is your opinion? What price could I charge for the tickets so that it may not be too much for the public and so that at the same time I may not be out of pocket? They say that La Signora Catalani¹ charged twenty five rubles. It's a good price.

It was very disagreeable for Charshy to fall suddenly from the heights of poesy down to the bookkeeper's desk but he understood worldly necessities very well and he plunged into commercial calculations with the Italian. The latter during this part of the business exhibited such savage greed such an artless love of gain that he disgusted Charshy who hastened to take leave of him so that he might not lose altogether the feeling of ecstasy awakened within him by the brilliant improvisation. The preoccupied Italian did not observe this change and he conducted Charshy into the corridor and out to the steps with profound bows and assurances of eternal gratitude.

The price of a ticket is 10 rubles the performance starts at seven o'clock

Play bill

THE ballroom of Princess N—— had been placed at the disposal of the improviser a platform had been erected and the chairs were arranged in twelve rows. On the appointed day at seven o'clock in the evening, the room was illuminated at the door before a small table to sell and receive tickets sat a long nosed old woman in a gray hat with broken feathers and with rings on all her fingers. Near the entrance to the house stood gendarmes.

The public began to assemble. Charsky was one of the first to arrive. He had played a large part in arranging for the performance and wished to see the improviser in order to learn if he was satisfied with everything. He found the Italian in a side room looking at his watch with impatience. The improviser was attired in a theatrical costume. He was dressed in black from head to foot. The lace collar of his shirt was thrown open his bare neck by its strange whiteness offered a striking contrast to his thick black beard his hair was combed forward and overshadowed his forehead and eyebrows.

All this was not very gratifying to Charsky who did not care to see a poet in the dress of a wandering juggler. After a short conversation he returned to the ballroom which was now rapidly beginning to fill up. Soon all the rows of seats were occupied by brilliant ladies the gentlemen crowded round the sides of the platform along the walls, and behind the chairs at the back the musicians, with their stands occupied two sides of the platform In the middle upon a table stood a porcelain vase

The audience was a large one Everybody awaited the commencement with impatience At last at half past seven the musicians made a stir, prepared their bows and played the overture from Tancredi All took their places and became silent The last sounds of the overture ceased The improviser welcomed by deafening applause which rose from all sides advanced with profound bows to the very edge of the platform

Charsky waited with uneasiness to see what would be the first impression created, but he perceived that the costume which had seemed to him so unseemly did not produce the same effect upon the audience even Charsky himself found nothing ridiculous in the Italian when he saw him upon the platform with his pale face brightly illuminated by a multitude of lamps and candles The applause subsided the sound of voices ceased

The Italian expressing himself in bad French requested the gentlemen present to indicate some themes by writing them upon separate pieces of paper At this unexpected invitation all looked at one another in silence and nobody responded The Italian after waiting a little while repeated his request in a timid and humble voice Charsky was standing right under the platform a feeling of uneasiness took possession of him he had a presentiment that the business would not be able to go on without him and that he would be compelled to write his theme Indeed several ladies turned their faces toward him and began to pronounce his name at first in a low tone then louder and louder Hearing his name the improviser sought him out with his eyes and perceiving him at his feet he handed him a pencil and a piece of paper with a friendly smile To play a role in this comedy seemed very disagreeable to Charsky but there was no help for it he took the pencil and paper from the hands of the Italian and wrote some words. The Italian taking the vase from the table descended from the platform and presented the urn to Charsky who dropped his theme into it. His example produced an effect two journalists in their capacity as literary men considered it incumbent upon them to write each his theme the secretary of the Neapolitan embassy and a young diplomat recently returned from a journey and in ecstasies over Florence, placed in the vase their folded papers. At last a very plain looking girl at the command of her mother with tears in her eyes wrote a few lines in Italian and blushing to the ears gave them to the improviser, the ladies in the meantime regarding her in silence, with a scarcely perceptible smile. Returning to the platform the improviser placed the urn upon the table, and began to take out the papers one after the other reading each aloud.

La famiglia dei Cenci L'ultimo giorno di
Pompeia Cleopatra e i suoi amanti La pri- mavera veduta da una prigione Il trionfo di
Tasso

What does the honorab'le company command? asked the Italian humbly. Will it indicate it? If one of the subjects proposed or let the matter be decided by lot?

By lot! said a voice in the crowd. By lot by lot! repeated the audience.

The improviser again descended from the platform holding the urn in his hands and casting an imploring glance along the first row of chairs asked

Who will be kind enough to draw out the theme?"

Not one of the brilliant ladies, who were sitting there stirred. The improviser not accustomed to Northern indifference was obviously in distress. Suddenly he perceived on one side of the room a small white gloved hand held up—he turned quickly and advanced toward a majestic young beauty, seated at the end of the second row. She rose without the slightest embarrassment and with the greatest simplicity in the world plunged her aristocratic hand into the urn and drew out a rolled slip of paper.

Will you please unfold it and read, said the improviser to her.

The young lady unrolled the paper and read aloud.

Cleopatra e i suoi amanti

These words were uttered in a low voice but such a complete silence reigned in the room that everybody heard them. The improviser bowed profoundly to the young lady, with an air of the deepest gratitude and returned to his platform.

Gentlemen, said he turning to the audience, the lot has indicated as the subject of improvisation Cleopatra and her lovers. I humbly request the person who has chosen this theme to explain to me his idea, what lovers are in question perché la grande regina aveva molto?

At these words, several gentlemen burst out laughing. The improviser was somewhat embarrassed.

I should like to know, he continued, to what historical topic does the person who has chosen this theme allude? I should feel very grateful if this person would kindly explain.

Nobody hastened to reply. Several ladies directed their glances toward the plain looking girl who had written a theme at the command of her mother. The poor girl observed this hostile attention and became so embarrassed that the tears came into her eyes. Charsky could not endure this and turning to the improviser he said to him in Italian

It was I who proposed the theme I had in view a passage in Aurelius Victor who alleges that Cleopatra named death as the price of her love and that there were found adorers whom such a condition neither frightened nor repelled It seems to me however, that the subject is somewhat difficult Could you not choose another?

But the improviser already felt the approach of the god He gave a sign to the musicians to play His face became terribly pale he trembled as if in a fever his eyes sparkled with a strange fire he pushed his dark hair off his forehead with his hand wiped his lofty brow covered with beads of perspiration with his handkerchief then suddenly stepped forward and folded his arms across his breast The music ceased The improvisation began

*The palace shone Sweet songs resounded
To lyres and flutes The daz-ling queen
With voice and look inspired the f asters
And kindled the resplendent scene
Her throne drew all men's hearts and glances
But suddenly her fervor fled
Pensive she held the golden goblet
And o'er it bent her wondrous head*

*The regal feast seems hushed in slumber
The guests the choir are still But she Now lifts her head up to address them
With an assured serenity
My love brings bliss have you not sworn it?
That bliss the man who wills may buy
Attend me I shall make you equal
Bid if you dare the boom am I
Who starts the auction sale of passion?
I sell my love but at a fee
Who at the cost of life will purchase
The guerdon of a night with me?*

*She spoke—and all are seized with horror
Each heart with passion waxes bold
Unmoved she hears the troubled murmur
Her face is insolent and cold
Her gaze contemptuously circles
The thranged admirers gathered there
Now one steps forth two others follow
Who greatly late and greatly dare
As they approach her throne she rises—
Their eyes are clear their step is free
The bargain's sealed three nights are purchased
And death will take the lovers three*

*The hall is frozen into silence
Still as a statue sits each guest
As lots are drawn in slow succession
From the dread urn the priests have blessed
First Flavius face sternly chiseled
Who in the legions had grown grizzled—
Not readily the Roman bore
Affront was life so dear a treasure?
The cost he did not stop to measure
Accepting as in time of war
The challenge that was flung by pleasure
Next Criso came a sage though young
Born in the graces of Epicurus
The Graces he had loved and sung
And Aphrodite too and Eros
The last who charmed both heart and eye
Was like a flower scarce unfolded
It was his lot to love and die
Unknown alas his cheeks were shaded With tender dawn his eyes were bright
With youthful ecstasy alight
The violence of virgin passion
Was surging in his boyish breast
O— him the scornful queen permitted
Briefly a grieving look to rest*

I you Mother of joy to serve you
 And strangely since for man and boy
 I play the harlot and surrender
 Myself unto a purchased joy
 Then hear my vow great Aphrodite
 Kings of the nether regions hear
 You gods who govern dreadful Hades
 I vow—till dawn's first rays appear
 I shall delight my masters wholly
 And show them every shape of bliss
 That satisfies the lover's ardor
 With soft caress and curious kiss—
 But when eternal Eos enters
 In morning purple then—I vow—
 The lucky ones will greet the headsmen
 And to his ax their necks will bow
 And lo! the fevered day has passed
 The golden horned moon is rising
 About the Alexandrian palace
 The tender shade of night is cast
 Rare incense smoke the lamps burn softly
 The fountains play with sounds of mirth
 The darkness brings voluptuous coolness
 For those who shall be gods on earth
 Midst marvels of a queen's designing
 In a luxurious dim room
 Behind the curtains purple gloom
 The aureate couch is softly shining

THE TEXT

In the preparation of this volume the original Pushkin text followed has been that edited by B. Tomashevsky and published in Leningrad in 1935. In the case of the posthumously published tale Dubrovsky of which only a rough draft is extant a compromise was effected between the text as it appears in S. A. Vengerov's edition of Pushkin's works (St. Petersburg 1910 v. 4) and the more recent one made by Y. G. Oxman (v. 4 of the six volume edition of Pushkin's works Moscow 1932). Vengerov's edition has also been relied upon for the final stanza of the poem which concludes Egyptian Nights.

Maurice Barings translation of I've Lived To Bury My Desires first appeared in The Slavonic and East European Review London July 1935. Thomas B. Shaw's version revised by the editor of The Lay of the Wise Oleg was published in Blackwood's Magazine Edinburgh 1845 v. 58. Constance Garnett's translation of To The Poet was taken from The Nation London June 13 1908. The following lyrics are reprinted from Russian Poetry An Anthology chosen and translated by Babette Deutsch and Avrahm Yarmolinsky New York International Publishers. A Nereid The Coach of Life For One Last Time With Freedom's Seed The Prophet Message to Siberia (translated by Max Eastman) Three Springs Casual Gift Antiar Madonna Verses Written During a Sleepless Night Work Autumn. The first three as well as Antiar have been slightly revised for the present volume. Oliver Elton's translation of The Bronze Horseman and of The Tale of the Pope and his Workman Baldi

originally appeared in The Slavonic Review London 1934-35 v. 13 and were reprinted in his volume Verses from Pushkin and Others Edward Arnold & Co. London 1935 Alfred Hayes's version of Boris Godunov appeared in a volume published in London by Hegan Paul and in New York by Dutton The text has been revised for the present edition A. F. B. Clark's translation of Mozart and Salieri first appeared in The University of Toronto Quarterly July 1933 The translator wishes to express his indebtedness to Prof. G. R. Noyes Dr. Isabel MacInness Mr. Jacob Biely and the editor of this volume for valuable corrections and emendations most of which have been incorporated in the text as revised for this volume T. Keane's translations of the stories (from The Pros Tales of Alexander Pushkin London) have been subjected to a thorough revision by the editor The verse in Egyptian Nights was translated by Babette Deutsch The present edition of Natalie Duddington's rendering of The Captain's Daughter differs from the earlier ones in that the so-called Omitted Chapter instead of being incorporated in the text is printed separately in order to give the reader the story as Pushkin himself prepared it for the press In Chapter XIV a paragraph left out by the translator was restored to its proper place for the translation of this paragraph the editor alone is responsible

The editor wishes to thank the translators whose work appears in these pages particularly Babette Deutsch as well as Messrs Alfred Hayes and A. F. B. Clark
